Retired Officers Are Found Jobs By Assoc.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: But it takes lots of sleuthing to find the right place. The job does not come looking for you. You have to search it out and sell yourself. Sincerely, A. R.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.

The Retired Officers' Association, of which I am secretary, has operated an employment clearing house for over eight years, finding paid employment in civilian life for those of our members who seek it.

Our experience supports your view that military officers, as experienced leaders of men, are desirable executive material in the business world.

These men have served, collectively, in most of the professions and have had experience in many lines of business; in the course of working for Uncle Sam, the nation's largest employer, probably.

Also these are men of proved integrity, loyalty and flexibility, with years of productive activity still ahead after they leave the armed forces.

This very valuable source of manpower is being utilized more and more by civilian employers, to the extent that nearly every retired service man, within our purview, who wants to work, can find satisfactory employment consistent with his capabilities.

Our headquarters address is: Inc., 1625 Eye Street Northwest Washington, D. C., Zone 20006. Telephone 783-8755. Sincerely,

DEAR H. C. Thanks for this reassuring information. It probably will be news to thousands of readers. And it should be especially helpful to Mrs. CW's morale, as she compares the current costs of living with the buying potential of a retired army officer's pension pay, and wonders where on earth money can be found to finance the children's higher education.

Pearls Were Ornaments In Times Of Antiquity

By MARGARET NESS

It wasn't until the 18th century, when science discovered how the pearl is made. It was much later before the process of aiding the oyster in forming pearls became a big business.

The best oyster beds are on the coasts of the southern islands of Japan where a warm stream from the south seas sweeps in. So oyster "farms" were started there.

Other oysters spawn in June. In a week or so the larvae turn into shellfish. These young oysters are then collected and kept in nets or cages, under the sea, for three years. At that time they are injected with an irritant. But the pearls will not be ready for another seven or eight years. During this time the "mother" oysters must be carefully watched, to see they get enough food and are safe from parasites that could destroy a whole oyster bed.

Cleopatra is said to have dissolved a pearl earring in vinegar and drunk the mixture while dining with Mark Antony. This is linked with the tradition that pearls are equated with love. But the story is apocryphal.

Something's gotta give, so the non-promoted are mustered out.)

The same holds true in the earlier grades, or lesser ranks. And when the captain or technical sergeant is mustered out, possibly after 15 to 18 years of service, before the 20 years (retirement standard) is fulfilled, he is out with NO retirement pay! So stop complaining, Mrs. CW, be thankful your family is not in this category.

I agree with you, M.H., that many civilian employers want good executive help, and many retired army men are qualified

ELLEN'S DIARY

Centennial Maple Trees Would Be Apt Memorials

"I got the sun in the maw'n' and the moon in the evenin'" a chuckle to Mack, kindling the hearth.

"I learned long ago the best way to light a fire anywhere is to put to make a choice as to what we should gather to memory's files to have for inspiration when our country-side has changed to a barer and emptier season. The spring's trees, we shall remember, the blend of the many shades, the patterns of the foliage, the linden, gold green as is the oak, both lovely pictures against the June sky, the latter an interesting study in its slower, more delicate manner of leafing. The birches, graceful ladies of trees and also the maples are new-leaved and beautiful.

Now, we wonder admiringly the "rock" type we have, why we farm-folks neglected to find us a sugar maple in early spring to plant on the lawn or in the yard to be a meaningful Centennial tree. One or two, here, and at homes up the valley would soon add up to thousands Island-over, to be engaging in the springtime and summer. And in autumn what added loveliness there would be over the length and breadth of our Province!

The leafings - the miracle of the transformation of the bare branches, will be our comfort when fall winds strip them again.

We think too of the sunsets. And the evening's peace we enjoyed when with Mack, and together enjoying the chore, we gathered up scores of sacks, fertilizer, lime and the like, that had been emptied in the stopping, to the little truck, and carried them a distance up the farm-lane, to burn.

"Now, if you could have found time to be a Scout, you would have learned the best way to

THE OYSTER PLAYS NO PART IN THE MAKING OF PEARLS

Here a bead is covered with a pearl-like essence, quite often fish scales.

The best known of these simulated pearls are produced on the Spanish island of Majorca in the Mediterranean. Tourists can roam around the large government store where all sorts of jewelry and figurines resembling the real gems are sold at reasonable prices. But there are no tours of the factory. The smell from the fish scales used is overpowering.

Simulated pearls have two advantages over the real thing, natural or cultured. Their lower price makes them available to those with small incomes. And their size can be regulated so that it is easy for the manufacturer to produce thousands in matching sizes and colors.

TEXTURE DIFFERS

One quick way of telling real from simulated pearls is the feel. Real pearls haven't the absolutely smooth surface of the imitation. There's almost a granulated feeling.

This spring there is great interest in pearls combined with gem stones. Trifari uses imitation pearls and pseudo good for pins, elongated and modernly shaped, to wear at the neckline of late-day dresses. There are also flower pins that look like pearls, embellished with rhinestones. And for summer strapless gowns, the suggestion is a necklace of two rows of mock pearls with a side clasp in various imitation gems.
