MARY HAWORTH

Keep Me Drinking To Justify Oneself?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was very moved by the letter from the man whose wife seems to be doing all she can to salvage his efforts to overcome his alcoholic bias.

My dear husband says "No, no" when I feel he becomes me to do something for, otherwise I like the boss very much. Thank you for any helpful suggestions. Sincerely, R.G. Perhaps he doesn't realize that he is committing an odious offense against good manners and social hygiene as practiced in the western world.

DEAR N.Y.: Could be you've missed the wife's game, as Tim glad to give currency to your theory. However, as I said before, the answer to the man's problem isn't so much unmasking his wife's motivation, as his finding the strength to stay sober himself.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Please advise us what to do about our boss who doesn't see his underdog? Need I say more?

DEAR N.Y.: I have thought of speaking to his wife (we are friends), but
