Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. Is it proper for the listener to a conversation to gaze constantly at the speaker? A. He should, of course, be attentive and look at the speaker—but not with a hypnotic gaze. And looking out of a window or off into space is disconcerting to a speaker, as well, and is a sign of ill-breeding.

Q. Is it all right to eat an open-face sandwich with the fingers? A. No; it should be eaten with the knife and fork, never with the fingers and fork, never with the fingers.

Q. Is it good form for a girl to have "Miss" before her name on her calling card? A. It is not only good form, but the omission of the title is a social error.

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barlow, M.D.

POINTS ABOUT APPENDICITIS I write from time to time about the great help given the physician if the patient with pain in abdomen takes no pain-relieving drugs until the physician arrives, thus enabling the doctor to more readily determine where the pain started, and if it has remained in the one spot or has moved around.

The description of the pain by the patient enables the physician to make a correct diagnosis of the ailment or disease present. Thus, if patient puts his finger on a spot, the pain is usually due to stomach ulcer; if whole hand is placed across the region of the stomach, the pain is more likely due to some liver or gall-bladder ailment.

In Postgraduate Medicine, Dr. Philip E. Thorndyke, Department of Surgery, University of Illinois, Cook County Graduate School of Medicine, illustrates his article on "Acute Abdominal Emergencies" with a picture of a patient placing his hand across the middle part of his abdomen in reply to the physician's question, "Where was your pain when it first started?"

The second illustration shows the patient with the end of his finger on a spot in the region of appendix, about two-thirds of the way down between the umbilicus and the tip of the hip bone, indicating the present painful area. This moving of the pain from the region of the umbilicus to the region of the appendix is good evidence of appendicitis. There are some other signs and symptoms of appendicitis mentioned by Dr. Thorndyke.

It is unfortunate that loss of appetite (anorexia) has not been stressed as the most common symptom present with acute appendicitis. I hesitate to diagnose acute appendicitis in any patient who is hungry. Lack of appetite, nausea and vomiting are three degrees of one symptom, being dependent upon the amount of distension or enlargement of the appendix.

It may be worth while for us to remember the Philadelphia resident greatly the number of deaths from appendicitis by campaigning against the patient receiving a purgative or food of any kind during an attack of appendicitis.

With the above simple points in mind the patient's chances of recovery in appendicitis is almost 99 per cent.

For Tomorrow While favorable for the conventional Sabbath vocations and avocations, with much solid and far-reaching good from such engagements, aspirations and desires, the day may not be so auspicious in affairs of a social, sentimental, domestic or romantic nature. The serious and solemn may thrive while the gay or frivolous may not measure up to hopes and wishes.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may have a constructive year in serious pursuits, with solid gain and progress in reward for concerted efforts, sound plans, for lasting and enduring objectives won by patience, endurance and fortitude. They may not enjoy such benign results in private affiliations, domestic, social or romantic, or cultural ambitions, or in any business efforts in connection with promoting these.

A child born on this day may not be as solid and secure in its private life as in its employment or practical pursuits. Over-indulgences could alienate it in its intimate relations.

Cook's Corner

Low Calorie Salad Dressing

One-quarter cup salad oil, 1-4 cup chili sauce, 1 8-oz. can tomato puree (or paste to be bought in Italian stores for making meat sauce for Italian dishes), 1 tablespoon finely diced green onion or chives, 1 cup cottage cheese finely sieved. Mix all ingredients. Beat them together for 1 minute. If strong rotary beater is used beat them for 2 minutes—they should be as smooth as beating will make them. Delicious on quartered head lettuce and with any vegetable salad. For fruit salads leave out the chili sauce and tomato sauce and replace it with 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1-2 cup drained crushed pineapple or apricot purée. Substitute orange rind for chopped onions or chives.

Morning Smile

Exciting

Two golfers were playing a ding-dong match, into the excitement of which even the caddies had entered. Going to the last hole all square, one man sliced badly while the other had an equally well pull. The first man found himself in a jungle. His first niblick shot raised a huge divot and moved the ball about six feet. He took turf with his second effort, also, but got the ball well away.

"By the way," he said, as he replaced the second divot, "what happened to the other caddie?" "Oh," said the caddie, "he's playing out of a bunker."

Q. How can I prevent spattering of hot grease when dropping eggs into the hot frying pan? A. If a little flour is added to the hot grease first, eggs will not cause it to spatter when they are dropped into the frying pan. This will also improve the flavor of the eggs.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmers Wife

Exceedingly lovely are these days on the farm, now that summer spills her enchantment over the country side. On every hand lies the gold-green of pasture and flowered-bedecked meadow. Down in Mr. A's field, the millstream emerges from its shadowing trees to catch and give back the tints of the sunlight; farm-homes cozy amid their groves grace the slopes which on either side of the valley run up gently to touch at length the blue of the horizon. And everywhere is spread the beauty and wonder of the season.

A first red rose, gay, and scented with the fragrance of all our summers, the children found on the lawn today—and fascinated they watched a humming-bird stop to drink at a columbine's bell. Each day reveals new treasures to them and none more engaging than the five kittens discovered at Alderlea recently, winsome furry things hidden away in a dark nook beneath a manger in a stable which now is no more.

Because, this week saw the interior of "that other barn," a part of which was the horse-stable, entirely dismantled. Stalls as fashioned in the original structure which dated to a time well beyond James' earliest recollections were taken down and discarded. The project brought its moments of regret to those of us who are older.

"It's just as well that you were here, Ellen, and not there with me to witness the destruction" James said of it. "I was so used to that stable I don't see how I'm going to farm without it." But the "saved" horse-shoes above the stalls and a

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN—

Two Wrongs Don't Make Right

Man Makes Love's Marriage To Escape A Prison Sentence

DEAR MISS DIX: Two years ago I met a man, and it was love at first sight! Our wedding plans were well under way when a woman had known previous to our meeting re-entered the scene. She had evidence from his past that would have caused him to serve a prison term, and her price for concealing it was that he marry her. I felt there was nothing else to do, and convince him accordingly, so they were married.

Of course they weren't happy. I stopped seeing him, but lately I have run into him twice and he told me that he has been miserable with his wife still loves me, and hopes someday to marry me. He insists that he cannot continue living with her as life is so miserable. I am miserable, too, and would like to know how we can both be happy. I know the old saying that "all's fair in love and war," but I don't want to do anything wrong. LOTTIE

ANSWER: Compounding a wrong will never make a right, and your ex-fiance seems to have a special penchant for doing exactly that. Having committed a wrong that deserved a prison term in the first place, he should have taken his punishment and wiped the slate clean.

A HOPELESS MESS I know that advice is more easily given than taken, but consider the mess he's made of his life—and yours—by trying to evade the law. He has served two years of a miserable marriage which is probably much worse than a jail sentence would have been, and more important, he is now in a position where he can't possibly get out of the marriage. He speaks of getting things settled, but how can he? His wife holds the same threat over him now as she did at the time of the wedding. So you see there is no possible escape for him.

You quote a proverb to prove that any action you take now is legitimate. But did you think she was right when she exercised the authority of the same god two years ago? Not only is it untrue that "all's fair in love," etc., but actually there are few things that are completely fair; and a breach with the basic principles of love and marriage is almost certain to end in unhappiness.

Your friend does not have very high principles and, while I can understand your own panic at the thought of him going to prison, you, too, should have thought the matter over more carefully. In which case you would have reached the conclusion that the mode of escape was far worse than the punishment.

Your trouble is a matter for discussion with someone thoroughly experienced in the complexities of humanity; it is too long and complicated for me to treat here, and you failed to give me your name and address. Your friend should consult with both a minister and lawyer, who will present the two sides of this question—moral and legal. His own conscience will then have to be the judge of future conduct.

DEAR MISS DIX: As a young man who has only been in this country three years, I would like to know how to win a wife. When I arrived here I was practically penniless and, knowing what poverty was, I applied myself to making and saving as much as possible. When I did meet girls I liked, I was more inclined to give my bank deposit the advantage, and so lost the girls. I now have a comfortable bank balance and am earning a good salary. My work doesn't put me in contact with girls, there are no social clubs or organizations available, and I certainly am not interested in the girls who frequent bars. So what is left for me? F. F.

ANSWER: I must congratulate you on your fine letter, which is certainly a credit to one who has only been here three years and spoke another language before that. (I had to shorten the epistle somewhat.) While it is certainly a most worthy thing to be thrifty, like many virtues, it can be overdone. Money is important and necessary, but it can never
