ELLEN'S DIARY

By an Island Farmer's Wife

"I think, Ellen, I'll take another look about the barn," James offers getting into his boots and now reaching for cap and jacket. "While I don't expect to just 'find a nest' Oh, I know, it's mild tonight but supposing one arrived and then wandered away from its mother... through the rails of the 'fold' in the shed and out into the snow. It would perish. Yes, I'll take a look just to be satisfied all is well.

"He is gone now into the starlight of this lovely winter night. It is not dark. Even when yard-lights are withdrawn it is pleasantly dim. And all about is the white of snow. In the yards drifts tower, though the fields are more lightly spread. One may still by day catch a sight of pale stubbles and the dark furrows that speak of the fall ploughing.

This super-abundance, which has returned to us who are older, memories of past snowy winters. We received this week in an old fashioned storm - one heralded ominously by a wind from the north-east. For three days it lasted. And while we could find more fearful storms in memory, it nevertheless, by blocking our roadway, isolated us for a while and as well, made the choring more difficult. But as a family we counted our blessings, mentioning them to each other for they were often in mind: the fuel we had in abundance, the food in supply more than sufficient, and throughout, the benefit of the electric power on which we have come to depend for most of the requirements of water of late.

And if for a day or so we missed the familiar sight of the mailman's sleigh bringing us the news of nations we received it in goodly measure by Radio - with the storm against the windows.

We remember of those days the wide vistas of snow - restles along the sleeping fields, loud gusty winds ve the quiet, deep and all-embracing that is part of a winter storm in the country... Jeanie roasted a chicken saved for just such a time; we found forgotten apples in the cellar and there were ends of Christmas candy discovered in out of the way places to help those of the family little intrigued by it, forget for a time the inclemency of the weather.

What stout hearts were required for the "digging out." The clearing of paths and doors. It was our good fortune to look back across the valley above mill and dark pond to Alderlea the morning after. It was indeed a wintry scene, roofs snow-covered, buildings screened by the drifts about the yard... "Well everything seems to be ship-shape" James reports of his cares. No lambkin wandering? Nor sheep out of fold? "De Massa ob de sheepfol" Dat guard de sheepfol bin Look out in de gloom'rin meadows When de long night rain begin. She call de herdin' shep'd Is My sheep, is day all come in?

For de Massa guards de sheepfol bin An' He wants to know Is My sheep come in? An' He's callin' 'callin' Callin' softly, softly. For dem all to come gadderin' in. Until Monday - - - Diary - - - Good-night - - -

Will Appear In Joint Recital

Gaelyne Craig

William K. Rogers

Music lovers of Charlottetown and district have a rare treat in store for them next week when the two artists pictured above will appear at the Prince of Wales auditorium in a joint recital.

Sponsored by the Musical Festival Association of this Province, the recital brings back Miss Gaelyne Craig, star of the 1949 Festival. At that time Miss Craig's lovely soprano voice was highly praised by the adjudicator, Mr. David Ouchterlony, of Toronto, who predicted a career for her in the field of music.

A former pupil of Notre Dame Academy and Miss Lillian MacKenzie, Mus. Bac., she has been studying for the past two years with the noted Canadian soprano, Miss Audrey Farnell.

Mr. William K. Rogers, pianist, has appeared in previous recitals here and his outstanding talent as a pianist is widely recognized.

He graduated from the Juilliard School of Music with a B.Sc. degree, majoring in piano, in 1943. Awarded a fellowship in composition in the Juilliard Graduate School, Mr. Rogers returned to New York after two and a half years' service with the Air Force, and received his Master's degree in 1948. He taught in the Hamilton Conservatory of Music for two years before returning to this City a year ago.

The Stars Say

By Genevieve Kemble For Tomorrow THE spirits and energies may be found holding over from recent stimuli with endeavors to put over big things in flourishing and far-reaching manner. However, the urge for relaxation, possible celebration, is insistent, and should be gracefully but conservatively indulged. It might be possible to exaggerate this worthy instinct, with over-emphasis or indulgence, begetting a regrettable situation. Youth feels it must "have its fling." Moderate or dominate this urge.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is are likely to feel keyed up to fine purpose and initiative, with new plans and ventures stimulating and exciting. And while there is much inciting work and ingenuity at the same time there is lack of co-operation from intimates, also very strong opposition from others who do not see eye to eye. Ignore disputes and useless arguments. Relax over the week end.

Day After Tomorrow

The horoscope encourages the pleasant prospect of centering the energies and the interest on the affairs of home and its stable and enduring values. Elders or the ill might be due for particular attention and unusual consideration. Also all church and intellectual affiliations could be productive of happiness and peace.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may find it a year of stability and growth in all these possessions having to do with home, probably sound investments, in banking and insurance. All pertaining to home and to elderly persons should thrive and prove sympathetic and comforting. Old loves and staunch friendships should give happiness and joy.

KEEPING THE EMPLOYEES AT WORK

It is interesting to see the change that has taken place in the duties of the physician in industry. Formerly, a surgeon was in charge of the care of the industrial worker, because both employee and employer thought first of accidents in connection with the industrial physician. Today, although most industrial physicians are skilled in first aid work and often have an assistant equipped to give first aid, their main job is keeping employees in good general health so that they will be practically always on the job, and so not interfere with the routine of the factory.

In The Ontario Medical Review, Dr. R. G. Birrell, Medical Director, Imperial Oil Limited, states that life would be far from enjoyable if we did not have good health. After pointing out the value of chest x-rays and the value of health examinations in the early diagnosis of heart and blood vessel disease, he speaks of the emotional problems of employees as an important part of the work of the physician or nurse in industry. "Worries due to family upsets, illness, finances, or to poor adjustment to the job have resulted in quite serious emotional upsets which are detrimental to, and interfere with, the normal usefulness of the employee at work."

Many cases of stomach, intestinal or heart and blood vessel symptoms have been investigated and physical disabilities as causes have been ruled out. These symptoms are believed to be a sign of poor adjustment at work or at home.

It can be seen that a case of poor adjustment to work or to domestic life might take a long time to discover, as the actual cause of poor work in industry and a frequent cause of absenteeism. Perhaps only by teamwork on the part of the physician, nurse and social worker will this emotional underlying cause be discovered. However, "the successful handling of such cases pays big dividends in well-adjusted employees who are able to do a normal or even better than a normal job, in place of being a burden to themselves as well as to others."

In all cases, emotional and otherwise, the family physician is taken into consultation as this is essential to the most effective care and treatment of the employee. It is a big step forward in industry when the employee becomes such an integral part of an operation that his all-round welfare is safeguarded.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN

Spoiled Daughter

Pretty, Self-Centered Girl Upsetting Family's Life

DEAR MISS DIX: I have two daughters, one finishing college and the other high school. The older girl is pretty and knows it, so she expects everyone to cater to her good looks and selfish disposition. Result: She hasn't any friends, either boys or girls, but doesn't blame it on herself - she manages to find another reason. Her attitude is that everyone is stupid but herself.

While the younger girl is not very pretty, she makes the most of her looks by being neat and clean and has a happy-go-lucky nature. She speaks to young and old with a smile and has lots of friends, especially boys, which makes her sister jealous. My husband and I have stopped inviting our friends and relatives because we are ashamed of our older girl's manners. She is rude to everyone who comes in, lounges in a housecoat most of the time. I am tired of making excuses and seeing the raised eyebrows of our guests. She is only 20 and is scared she'll be an old maid; frankly, so am I, unless she changes her disposition. She is making life miserable for everyone in the house.

MRS. W. G. ANSWER: It is certainly a waste of nature's good gifts when an attractive girl throws away her endowments. It is, however, a consolation to the plain Janes that beauty isn't everything; in fact, is nothing whatever unless accompanied by charm and graciousness. Your younger daughter has learned the secret of happiness and will be forever blessed for the knowledge.

MAKE HER BEHAVE

You and your husband are very wrong in letting the haughty miss ruin the family's peace and harmony. Since she is living under the parental roof, is attending college at her father's expense, and is dependent upon him for her clothes and spending money, he is the one to crack the whip - not your daughter. You have apparently let the reins of authority slip from your hands into your daughter's. Better get them back - and quickly! If she cannot face your guests with a smile, make her stay in her own room for the evening and reduce the allowance until she can act like an intelligent girl of 20. It isn't too late yet for you to exercise a little discipline, but time's a-wasting, so don't put it off too long.

Disillusion your girl about her mental capacity. She is being so stupid that she's probably the laughingstock of half the folks in town. Bring that interesting fact home to her! Bad manners are as certain a sign of ignorance as I know, and all the college degrees in the world won't remove the stigma. Being smart takes more than the ability to pass exams and get a diploma; the ability to get along with people is the surest mark of intelligence. What she does with her life will be her own business, but you must insist that she stop running and ruining the entire household. This much you, as the mother, owe your husband and younger daughter. Keeping harmony in the home is your job; if you can't handle it, call upon father's disciplinary measures, but whatever form the authority must take, see that it is exercised.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm 13 years old, 4 feet 10 inches tall, and would like to get taller. My big sister says I will stay small like her. She is 20 years old and 4 feet 11 inches. What should I do to get taller?

TESSIE ANSWER: My, my, you're a lucky girl, Tessie, and don't realize it! The petite miss is always the envy of her larger, more robust friends. It is easier for a small girl to buy - or make - her clothes; she can wear a much greater variety of clothing than a tall girl. Besides, there is absolutely nothing you can do to increase your height, so better be content with your blessings. I'm sure your sister will point out many advantages she enjoys as a junior miss.

DEAR MISS DIX: Should or shouldn't a girl telephone a boy for Continued on page 11
