Happenings of The Week

The King's prolonged convalescence from influenza and inflammation of the lungs will not prevent him carrying out state duties, a Buckingham Palace spokesman said Wednesday. He was emphatic that there had been no suggestion of appointing a Council of State to relieve the King of these duties. Such a Council is appointed only if the monarch is out of the country or if he is too ill to carry out his duties. Neither of these conditions apply, the spokesman said, and the King will continue to approve State papers and deal with other official business as he has been doing throughout his attack of influenza. A bulletin signed by four doctors last night said the King was continuing to make good progress but in view of the attacks of catarrhal infection he had suffered this year he had been advised that a prolonged convalescence was essential. The Buckingham Palace spokesman said he did not know how long the period of convalescence would be or how far into the future it would affect the King's plans. He is due to visit Australia and New Zealand next year. Main strain on the King's health during the last year has been an almost continuous series of state functions, tours and ceremonies. This combined with the fact that Britain has just emerged from one of the dampest and longest winters for many years, caused his run-down condition.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The farming suffered more than one set-back this week, due to inclement weather. More than once the sowing begun so blithely beneath sunny skies was suspended because of rain and the family shook heads in concern and wondered "Will these showers and dampness ever cease?" In spite of this the week has much to its credit, as used by the farmers. We recall how good it was to find time for the shearing, a chore as old as the hills, but not one to be preferred to the field-work. We remember of it now, the plaintive bleating during temporary separations, and James' look of chagrin, when a ewe bounded lightly past him to be followed by others when the battle of herding the flock from pasture to fold was almost won. And granddaughter's words return to mind, her comment after she had overheard James' pointed instructions to us assisting in the drive. "Santa Claus won't come to granddaddy this year," she nodded. "You wouldn't

Our Trip To Europe

The next day we travelled to Amsterdam, about an hour's train ride, and passed through Holland's capital, The Hague, or as they call it "Der Haag", and Haarlem, with its world famous organ. At Amsterdam is the huge palace which is the residence of Princess Juliana, topped with a large blue globe. Many of the streets in this city are of water, as in Venice. We took a tour in Amsterdam and had one of the most enjoyable days of the whole trip. We first viewed Amsterdam's harbour with many vessels and whaling boats in port, and were then taken through a typical Dutch farmhouse. The utmost in cleanliness, it was of a pyramid shape with stables, hay etc. all under one roof. We were told that the cows were kept in the stable in the colder weather but it was so spotless that we thought it must have only been used as a tourist attraction. It was even equipped with curtains on the windows and rugs on the floor. The stable was made and we sampled some of Holland's Neudham cheese. Over all was the hayloft. We were then taken by boat to two islands, both of which retain the native costumes. The first of these was the Island of Volendam, which is one hundred per cent Roman Catholic. It was very interesting to see the men in their baggy trousers and wooden shoes; and the women with their long colourful hand-embroidered skirts and hats. The women part their long blond hair down the centre of the back and let it hang over

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Consider The Children "Happiness First" Attitude Selfish and Unrealistic

DEAR MISS DIX: I, a married woman, am in love with a married man, the father of two children. We have planned to divorce our mates and marry each other, but he feels that he should not leave his children. He and his wife do not love each other, but still he is willing to give up his chance for happiness because of these children. Do you think we should give up our lives and happiness because of them? Are we supposed to listen to our hearts or our minds? What shall happiness what counts in married life and in a home? Do we do, suffer for two children or listen to our hearts and start anew? LUCY

ANSWER: Certainly nothing will be lost if you get a divorce! Your husband will be well rid of a selfish, conscienceless woman.

YOUR PLAN IS SHOCKING

Should you listen to your hearts, or your minds? I doubt if you have either a heart or a mind. The I occupy in the human soul are completely occupied. It settles aside and makes straight for the arms of another love. It certainly isn't "happiness" they're seeking; their only desire is self-indulgence. Happiness is a gift that has to be earned; it is never attained by shirking responsibility, breaking up a home and depriving youngsters of a father or mother. Once a new soul has been brought into the world, parents are bound in conscience to make it a pleasant thing to contemplate. If you have a spark of decency left, you'll leave your married friend alone with his wife and children, and look elsewhere for diversion. DEAR MISS DIX: I recently married a widow with children. I have to work in another town but get home to see my family a week. I have made the down payment on a house where I want to am doing all I can to get the family moved as soon as possible.
