

N.S. Herring Fishermen Says Ottawa Trip 'Waste'

SANDY COVE, N. S. (CP) — A herring fisherman who drove to Ottawa this summer to complain about New Brunswick fishing activity in Nova Scotia's St. Mary's Bay said here Sunday the trip was apparently a waste of money.

Newcomb Harris and three others say they told Fisheries Minister MacLean that New Brunswick boats were ruining their weir fishing in the bay, a 30-mile inlet divided from the Bay of Fundy by Digby Neck.

Harris said Sunday the government promised "to look into it and let us know . . . they said they would even come down here."

"But we haven't heard a peep from them," he said.

And the weir fishermen say their troubles have started all over again. Harold Crowell said the seiners have returned to the bay. Harris said the seiners operate "in behind our weirs and break up the schools of herring."

Crowell said "when the seiners are through there is nothing for anyone."

Weir fishermen set large nets on stakes into which the herring swim and are trapped. The fish are moved at low tide. Seiners operate with dragging equipment pulled by powered vessels.

Loren E. Baker, Atlantic area director of the Fisheries Department, declined to comment on the fishermen's charges.

The weir fishermen operate about seven months of the year, selling most of their catch in Black's Harbor, N.B. Crowell said they were enjoying their best season in 10 years until the seiners arrived two weeks ago.

"Here on the Neck," he said, "there is little else to do but fish and if the fishing is ruined there will be no way of making a living here."

Harris said the Sandy Cove delegation drove to Ottawa in July in his car and paid their own expenses.

Pranksters Steal Corpse And Dump It 45 Miles Away

SABINA, Ohio (AP) — They brushed old Eugene's clothes off dusted him up a bit and put him back on his little couch Tuesday and said, "tsk, tsk, tsk, what a thing to do to a corpse."

Especially Eugene. When a corpse has lain nice and peaceful for nearly 30 years in his pleasant little brick house and always looked so—well, eerie in a way, but sort of beautiful—you figure he's earned a little more respect.

But there are always pranksters around and in Tuesday's early morning darkness they broke into old Eugene's place and carted him 45 miles and dumped him on a bench on the Ohio State University campus in Columbus.

Elige Kelem, an OSU employee, found him.

Well, there wasn't much Kelem could do but call police. So he did, and it wasn't too long before one of them remembered about Eugene.

And by 8:30 a.m. Eugene was back home, much to the relief of Bart Littleton, operator of the Littleton Funeral Home in this southeastern Ohio community of some 1,700 people.

Eugene's home is behind the Littleton place.

Somebody—nobody remembers who—first saw Eugene June 5, 1929, walking through Sabina. The second time they saw the middle-aged Negro, he was leaning against a fence post, very relaxed and sort of thoughtful-looking. He may have been relaxed, but he wasn't thinking. He was dead, apparently of a heart attack.

The 1929 owner of the funeral home, Olin R. Moon, now dead himself, embalmed the stranger and put him in the back building. He thought someone might come along and identify him.

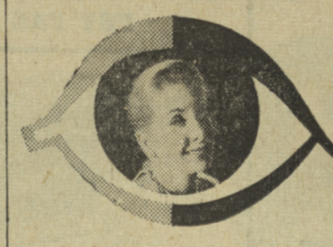

The body was out there quite a spell, but no one ever came. In time it became apparent that an extraordinary embalming job had been done.

"We don't know why he never buried him," Littleton said. "The thing just kept going as it was."

Somehow along the way, the corpse got named "Eugene."

Deepening Concern Shown By Bank Over Inflation

OTTAWA (CP)—The Canadian money pot has been bubbling with a heavy addition of new funds, but the insatiable hunger for money—and credit—appears far greater than the pot can provide.

Thus, with deepening concern over the possibility of inflation, the Bank of Canada appears to have imposed new restraints on the expansion of the country's money supply.

That, perhaps is one of the main reasons why the central bank's interest rate has climbed steadily, week by week, reaching to 3.2 per cent last Thursday from the all-time low of 1.12 last August. The all-time high was 4.33 per cent in August last year.

SOME SHORTAGES LIKELY

The restraints appear to have been imposed amid prospects of some shortages likely in the overall supply of mortgage money and heavy unemployment in the coming winter months.

However, officials emphasized that the central bank has added extensively to the country's money pot in the last 12 months, increasing the over-all supply by some $1,600,000,000 to a total of more than $13,000,000,000.

That, they say, is one of the largest increases in recent years, ranging up to about 14 per cent from previous averages of about four or five per cent.

RISE IN DEFICIT

The expansion in the money supply has provided the chartered banks with a lot more funds with which to make loans—and earn interest. It was an indication of a heavy demand, mainly by the federal government, for more credit to cover a swelling treasury deficit.

Let's just see how this works: The government, looking at its coffers, decides it can no longer pay its way and must borrow heavily to cover expenditures. The plains of the situation may be that the available supply of money just isn't sufficient to cover all the demand for loans.

Is the government to compete sharply with other institutions for available money—and thus force interest rates to unusual highs—or is the Bank of Canada going to step in and increase the overall money supply by buying more of the government bonds?

The central bank earlier this year decided to boost purchases of bonds. Over the years, it increased its holdings by some $213,000,000 to a total of $2,600,000,000 or so.

WIDESPREAD EFFECT

On the surface that doesn't look like much of an increase. But its ramifications are widespread. The money the government receives from the central bank in exchange for bonds is deposited in chartered banks. These deposits are then switched over to the central bank.

Now for every $1 the chartered banks have on deposit with the central bank, they can lend about $12.50 to the public. That is based on the regulation that only eight per cent of their total deposits must be in the form of cash in the till or deposits with the central bank.

So that every time the central bank lends money to the government, it in fact, initiates an expansion in the country's money supply. The central bank's fear is that this expansion could lead to heavy inflation in the future.

Other federal experts may discount its fears, but the central bank has control over the money supply. In the end, it appears that it is the decisions of the bank that count.

Jordan Will Charge Syria With Aggression

AMMAN (AP)—Premier Samir Rifal told a cheering emergency session of Parliament Tuesday night that Jordan will accuse Syria of an act of aggression for intercepting King Hussein's vacation-bound plane.

Thunderous applause greeted his announcement that the government would bring the case before the United Nations Security Council and ask Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to take quick measures for a debate.

Parliament then unanimously adopted a resolution giving the government a free hand to take any action necessary in the new crisis.

The premier spoke as the country went on a spree of celebration.

A national holiday was declared to celebrate the young king's escape from what he charged was an attempt to kidnap or kill him in a flight over Syria Monday.

EMERGES AS HERO

Hussein, who celebrates his 24th birthday Friday, emerged as a hero for defying the Syrian MIG fighters and making a successful getaway.

Suspect Air Pollution Is Speeding Death

WASHINGTON (AP)—Government scientists suspect that air pollution may be causing some kinds of fatal cancers.

On the basis of studies, they also feel that such pollution, worst in cities, may speed death in certain heart disease cases.

The possible relationship between air pollution and mortality from cancer and heart disease was discussed in a booklet made public by the Public Health Service.

Expanding on that report, Dr. Richard A. Prindle said "there is definitely more cancer of certain types in urban areas, and more heart disease of the arteriosclerotic type and other kinds."

Prindle, chief of the air pollution study program, added that "We can't say air pollution causes the heart disease but it seems to hasten death of those affected by heart disease."

The booklet said mortality for a number of diseases—notably certain heart ailments and cancer of the stomach, lungs and esophagus — "is markedly higher among city dwellers than among rural people."
