MARY HAWORTH

Despair Makes Her Reject Help

Dear Mary Haworth: My married daughter, 27, has had much to contend with, in her domestic and married life, in the last three years. She has been married seven years, and her husband drinks and is somewhat afraid of him and he belittles her constantly. He is a real bully type, I'd say.

After a separation he came back to her, and the conflict started all over again. They have a lovely daughter, aged 6, who has to live with their quarrels—but so far it hasn't upset her. She is sweet and intelligent for her age.

What I am concerned about is my daughter's mental state. She had lost weight and was a ferent person when she left her; but since his return, the weight is back, and she is very depressed most of the time.

Jake (I'll call him) won't do much to please her; and in their home hasn't done anything to make it cheerful, clean and pleasant. Alma has lost all interest in keeping her home clean and represents any comments regarding its deplorable condition.

Other symptoms are that she can't keep any appointments on time; and nowadays she generally makes them several times before she goes at all. I am at a loss to know how to help her; so what do you suggest? She can't afford much more than just the essentials.

Would she be better off without Jake? They have just paid off the attorneys' fees—which amounted to several hundred dollars. Why are people so foolish? Or is it just because they are incompatible? Your kind comment will be much appreciated. C.G.

Dear C.G.: You have cause for urgent concern about Alma's emotional depression. And the fact that she "resents any comments" about her deplorable housekeeping—meaning your efforts to lend a hand or lift her spirits, I take it—shows how deeply entrenched she is, how alone she feels in an embittered and embattled sense of injury.

Her reticent reaction to your anxious ineffectual solicitude has an element of masochism in it—of unconsciously self-willed attachment to suffering occasioned by feelings caused by hate-felings probably.

But also her non-co-operative attitude, as regards your wish to help, amounts to saying angrily (this is her unconscious sentiment): "I resent the patronage of your pity. And I don't try to make amends to me for your own past neglect of my happiness or my real needs. Don't try to 'reach' me now; and don't think you can do anything about the problem; you can't."

LACKS FAITH IN ANYBODY

Her difficulty in keeping appointments, either on time or at all, is an aspect of emotional illness. It has to do with relapsing into a childish category of dependency. It means that in marriage to Jake, her personality is deteriorating—due in minor part to her confused immaturity of character, at the start of wifehood; but principally to the morbid adjustments after which a delicious lunch was served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Edson McLean and Miss Mabel McLeod.

Stuffing Is As Important As Is The Turkey Itself

By CAROLYN WILLET
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP)—Turkey with all the trimmings has become the traditional Christmas fare across Canada. But what's tucked inside the aristocratic bird is also important, say experts in the consumer section of the federal agriculture department.

One way to give the stuffing a pleasing, distinctive flavor is to add sausage meat, home economist Laura Pepper, chief of the consumer section, said in an interview.

The stuffing should not be mixed until the turkey is ready to be popped into the oven.

Dry bread crumbs, not fresh bread, make the best stuffing and, because the filling swells in cooking, the turkey should be stuffed loosely. The amount of bread needed can be judged by the weight of a drawn turkey; it takes about one cup of stuffing per pound.

If there's stuffing left over, it can be placed in mustard tins or custard cups, covered with foil and baked for an hour to make an extra garnish on the turkey platter.

CHRISTMAS SWEETS

Along with turkeys, ducks and geese, the seasonal spotlight is shared by fancy cookies and home-made candies.

"Nothing but the best is good enough for the special occasions," says Miss Pepper, with an added hint that butter is a top cookie ingredient.

Homemade candies, as well as being treats for the family, can be individually packed in colored, fluted papers, boxed and wrapped with silver foil and tied with a sprig of holly to make a happy gift for a sweet-toothed friend.

Maple cream, a typically Canadian candy, is easy to make and takes only two ingredients.

Here's the consumer section's tested recipe, using two cups of maple syrup and three-quarters of a cup of table or whipping cream. Combine maple syrup and cream. Bring to boil and boil without stirring until a soft ball may

Brackley Pt. Held H. And S. Meeting

On Wednesday evening, Mrs. Lantz accompanied by Mrs. Scantlebury, Charlottetown, were welcomed to Brackley Point for the purpose of organizing a Home and School there.

Mrs. Lantz briefly outlined the purposes and aims of this organization as well as pointing out the value of a Home and School to both teachers and parents. A questionnaire led by Mrs. Lantz was heartily discussed and all took part in the discussion which followed.

An interesting feature of the evening followed with Mr. Gordon Rice as Guest speaker. His topic was: "Teacher shortage and teacher recruitment." In his usual capable manner he stressed the importance and need of such an organization and hoped that the following meetings would be as profitably spent.

He congratulated the teacher and parents for showing such interest in an organization of this kind. He felt that it was an opportunity for both to understand the importance of our youths education of today as well as being an aid in helping to solve their problems.

Miss Curley then thanked one and all for their co-operation and enthusiasm shown and hoped that all other meetings would be so largely attended. Mrs. Lantz briefly replied and hoped that on other occasions she would be able to attend.
