CHAPTER XX.

'How long did it take to get there?'

'Why, it took us the best part o' two days' walking; but it's nothing o' a day's journey for any body as has got a first-rate horse. The Captain 'ud get in nine or ten hours, I'll be bound, he's such a rider. And I shouldn't wonder if he's back again tomorrow; he's too active to rest long in that lonely place, all by himself, for there's nothing but a bit of an inn i' that part where he's gone to fish. I wish he'd got th' estate in his hands; that 'ud be the right thing for him, for it 'ud give him plenty to do, and he'd do well too, for all he's so young; he's got better notions o' things than many a man twice his age. He spoke very handsome to me th' other day about leading me money to set up i' business; and, if things come round that way, I'd rather be beholdin' to him nor to any man i' th' world.'

Poor Adam was led on to speak about Arthur because he thought Hetty would be pleased to know that the young Squire was so ready to befriend him; the fact entered into his future prospects, which he would like to seem promising in her eyes. And it was true that Hetty listened with an interest which brought a new light into her eyes and a half smile upon her lips.

'How pretty the roses are now!' Adam continued, pausing to look at them. 'See!
I stole the prettiest, but I didna mean to keep it myself. I think these are all pink, and have got a finer sort o' green leaves, are prettier than the striped 'uns, don't you?'

He set down the basket, and took the rose from his buttonhole.

'It smells very sweet,' he said; 'those striped 'uns have no smell. Stick it in your frock, and then you can put it in water after. It 'ud be a pity to let it fade.'

Hetty took the rose, smiling as she did so as the pleasant thought that Arthur could so soon get back if he liked. There was a flash of hope and happiness in her mind, and, with a sudden impulse of gaiety, she did what she very often done before—stuck the rose in her hair a little above the left ear. The tender admiration in Adam's face was slightly shadowed by reluctant disapproval. Hetty's love of finery was just the thing that would most provoke his mother, and he himself disliked it as much as it was possible for him to dislike anything that belonged to her.

'Ah! he said, 'that's like the ladies in the pictures at the Chase; they've mostly got flowers, or feathers, or gold things i' their hair, but somehow I don't like to see 'em; they allays put me i' mind o' the painted woman outside the shows at Treddles on fair. What can a woman have to set her off better than her own hair, when it curls so, like yours? If a woman's young and pretty, I think you can see her good looks all the better for her being plain dressed. Why, Dinah Morris looks very nice, for all she wears such a plain cap and gown. It seems to me as a woman's face doesna want flowers; it's almost like a flower itself. I'm sure yours is.'

'Oh, very well,' said Hetty, with a little playful pout, 'taking the rose out of her hair, 'I'll put one o' Dinah's caps on when we go in, and you'll see if I look better in it. She left one behind so I can take the pattern.'

'Nay, nay, I don't want you to wear a Methodist cap like Dinah's. I dare say it's a very ugly cap, and I used to think when I saw her here, as it was nonsense for her to dressed different t' other people; but I never rightly noticed her till she came to see mother last week, and then I thought the cap seemed to fit her face somehow as th' acorn-cup fits th' acorn, and I shouldn't like to see her so well without it. But you've got another sort o' face; I'd have you just as you are now, without anything t' interfere with your own looks. It's like when a man's singing a good tune, you don't want t' hear bells tinkling and interfering wi' the sound.'

He took her arm and put it within his again, looking down on her fondly. He was afraid she should think he had lectured her, imagining, as we are apt to do, that she had perceived all the thoughts he had only half expressed. And the thing he dreaded most was lest any cloud should come over this evening's happiness. For the world he would not have spoken of his love to Hetty yet, till this commencing kindness toward him should have grown into unmistakable love. In his imagination he saw long years of his future life stretching before him, blessed with the right to call Hetty his own; he could be content with very little at present. So he took up the basket of currants once more, and they went on toward the house.

The scene had quiet changed in the last half hour that Adam had been in the garden. The yard was full of life now; Marty was letting the screaming geese through the gate, and wickedly provoking the gander by nuzzing at him; the granary door was groaning on its hinges as Alick shut it, after dealing out to the corn; the horses were being led out to watering, amid much barking of all the three dogs, and many 'whups' from Tim the dogman, as if the heavy animals who held down their necks, intelligent heads, and lifted their shaggy feet so deliberately, were likely to rush wild in every direction but the right. Every body was come back from the meadow and when Hetty and Adam entered the house place, Mr. Poyser was seated in the three-corner of chair, and the grandfather in the large arm chair opposite, looking on with pleasant expectation while the supper was being laid on the oak table. Mrs. Poyser had laid the cloth herself—cloth made of homespun linen, with a shining checkered pattern on it, and of an agreeable whity-brown hue, such as all sensible housewives like to see—some of your bleached 'shop-rag,' that would wear into holes in no time, but good homespun that would last for two generations. The odd veal, the fresh lettuce, and the stuffed chine, might well look tempting to hungry men who had dined at half-past twelve o'clock. On the large deal table against the wall there were bright pewter plates and spoons and cans, ready for Alick and his companions, for the master and servants ate their supper not far off each other which was all the pleasanter, because if a remark about to-morrow morn-ing's work occurred to Mr. Poyser, Alick was at hand to hear it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Price of Pork.

Sir,—In a letter to you a few days ago I said that the Patriot had stated that pork had advanced. Yet, in their issue of the 24th inst., under the heading a "Critic Criticised," they not only deny that they made such a statement, but abuse me in an ungentlemanly manner, simply because I am anxious that in giving market prices (both local and foreign), as well as in making estimates of exports, etc., all papers should exercise caution. He calls me a crank, a word, by the way, very much used now; but there are different kinds of cranks. My arm has often ached turning one on a grindstone. I have never turned one on a hardy-gurdy, but it's awful hard times now, and perhaps a partnership might be formed with the Patriot's "scribbler," for judging a tree from its fruit, there must be a massive intellect behind such an able production, at least sufficiently large to enable him to act in the capacity of the indispensable monkey.

However, for his edification, I will quote from the market clerk's returns of the 6th inst—pork, carcasses, 5 1/2 to 6; and from the Patriot's local of the 13th inst., "pork has advanced half a cent a pound by the carcass." There was no such advance; and the author of that statement told me personally, that it was Mr. — who met him and told him, and he thought it was all right. Now, sir, every farmer for some time back, who brought a carcass of pork to market has seemed dissatisfied, and thinks buyers are not paying as much as they should, and they'll say: "Why, pork has advanced a half cent a pound," and when, if you tell them it's not so, they will, with child-like faith, tell you, "Oh! I saw it in the papers." He generally settles that argument by making the bold statement that the papers often lie, or are sometimes slightly inaccurate.
