LAWRENCE WHELAN, Defendant.

BY virtue of a Writ of Statute Execution to me directed, issued out of her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature, at the suit of the said Edward Jarvis Hodgson, surviving Executor of the last will and testament of Daniel Hodgson, against the said Lawrence Whelan, I have taken and seized as the Property of the above-named Defendant, Lawrence Whelan, the following property, namely: All that tract, piece and parcel of land, situate, lying and being on Lot 31, in Queen's County, in Prince Edward Island, bounded and described as follows, that is to say: Commencing at the north-west angle of Plot No. 237, on the west side of a road leading to Stanhope; thence west seventy-three chains, or until it meets the east boundary of a tract of land now or lately in possession of John Auld; thence north twenty chains; thence east seventy-three chains, or until it meets the said road; thence following the course thereof south twenty chains to the place of commencement, containing one hundred and forty-six acres of land, a little more or less, being thus described in a certain Indenture of Lease made the 10th day of November, 1849, between Sir Graham G. Montgomery, of the one part, and Neil McGinnis, of the other part.

ALSO—All that other tract, piece and parcel of land, situate, lying and being on Lot 31 aforesaid, bounded and described as follows, that is to say, having a front of ten chains on the west side of the Friston Road, and running back west by parallel lines, bounded on the south by Hugh Connors' farm, on the north partly by John Auld's farm and partly by vacant land, and on the west partly by John Landerkin's farm and John Auld's farm, containing seventy-four (74) acres, a little more or less, being thus described in an Indenture of Lease, dated the 4th day of December, A. D. 1844, and made between Sir Graham G. Montgomery, of the one part, and John Ware, of the other part, the two tracts of land containing two hundred and twenty acres, a little more or less.

ALSO—All that other tract, piece and parcel of land, situate, lying and being on Lot 31 aforesaid, bounded and described as follows, that is to say, by a line commencing on the west side of the Covehead Road, at a point ten chains south from the north boundary of a tract of one hundred and twenty-one and three-quarter acres of land, conveyed by the Commissioner of Public Lands to William Brown; it runs thence west fifty-eight chains and sixty links, or to a tract of seven and three-quarter acres assigned by said Lawrence Whelan to William Brown aforesaid; thence south three chains and twelve links; thence east to the road; thence north along the road to the place of commencement, containing eighteen acres and one rood of land, a little more or less.

ALSO—All that other tract, piece and parcel of land, situate, lying and being on Lot 31 aforesaid, bounded and described as follows, that is to say, by a line commencing on the east side of the Covehead Road, in the southern boundary of land conveyed by the Commissioner of Public Lands to William Wooldridge; it runs thence east fifty-four chains; thence south ten chains to land now or formerly in possession of Michael Landrigan; thence west to the road; thence north along the same to the place of commencement, containing fifty-four acres of land, a little more or less.

April.

Gone are the wastes of snow. Valley and hill
Woo with bared bosoms the sun's ardent kisses.
Pulses that slept so long, flutter and thrill,
Wake by the sun and the south wind's caresses.

Sailing across the blue, clouds come and go;
Under their fleecy skirts wild geese are winging.
Sunset is burning red—full in its glow,
On yonder tree top a robin is singing.

Out through the evening air rings its glad song,
While the glow fades and darkness comes creeping.
Rings it again at morn, sweet, clear and strong,
Just at the day dawn, while sluggards are sleeping.

Red-breasted laureate, would I could sing
Strains such as those from thy sweet throat swelling!
Once but to sing like thee, bird of the spring,
Oh! it were happiness, joy beyond telling!

Warbles the bird, all untrampled by art,
Songs that are given and not of his making.
Oh! to sing thus, the while throbs at my heart
All the sweet thrill of the earth's glad making.

Touched I my harp—the strings broke in my hand;
Wove I a rhyme—it failed in expressing
Half of my thought—and so, silent I store,
Glad in the spring time, content in its blessing.

CHAPTER XLI.

Joy, joy, in London now!
SOUTHEY.

The news of the capture of the Rover reached Kirkwall about an hour before noon, and filled all men with wonder and with joy. Little business was that day done, at the Fair, whilst people of all ages and occupations streamed from the place to see the prisoners as they were marched towards Kirkwall, and to triumph in the different appearance which they now bore, from that which they had formerly exhibited when ranting, swaggering and bullying in the streets of that town. The bayonets of the marines were soon seen to glisten in the sun, and then came the melancholy troop of captives, handcuffed two and two together. Their finery had been partly torn from them by their captors, partly hung in rags about them; many were wounded and covered with blood, many blackened and scorched with the explosion, by which a few of the most desperate had in vain striven to blow up the vessel. Most of them seemed sullen and impenitent, some were more becomingly affected with their condition, and a few braved it out, and sung the same ribald songs to which they had made the streets of Kirkwall ring when they were in their frolics.

The Boatswain and Goffe, coupled together, exhausted themselves in threats and imprecations against each other; the former charging Goffe with want of seamanship, alleging that the Boatswain had prevented him from firing the powder that was stowed forward, and sending them all to the other world together. Last came Cleveland and Bunce, who were permitted to walk unshackled; the decent melancholy, yet resolved manner of the former, contrasting strongly with the stage strut and swagger which poor Jack thought it fitting to assume, in order to conceal some less dignified emotions. The former was looked upon with compassion, the latter with a mixture of scorn and pity; while most of the others inspired horror, and even fear, by their looks and their language.

There was one individual in Kirkwall, who was so far from hastening to see the sight which attracted all eyes, that he was not even aware of the event which agitated the town. This was the elder Mertoun, whose residence Kirkwall had been for two or three days, part of which had been spent in attending to some judical proceedings, undertaken at the instance of the Procurator Fiscal, against that grave professor, Bryce Snailsfoot. In consequence of an inquisition into the proceedings of this worthy trader, Cleveland's chest, with his papers and other matters therein contained, had been restored to Mertoun, as the lawful custodier thereof, until the right owner should be in a situation to establish his right to them. Mertoun was at first desirous to throw back upon Justice the charge which she was disposed to intrust him with; but, on perusing one or two of the papers, he hastily changed his mind—in broken words, requested the Magistrate to let the chest be sent to his lodgings, and, hastening homeward, bolted himself into the room, to consider and digest the singular information which chance had thus conveyed to him, and which increased in a tenfold degree, his impatience for an interview with the mysterious Norna of the Fitful-head.

It may be remembered that she had required of him, when they met in the Churchyard of Saint Ninian, to attend in the outer aisle of the Cathedral, of Saint Magnus, at the hour of noon, on the fifth day of the Fair of Saint Olla, there to meet a person by whom the fate of Mordaunt would be explained to him.—"It must be herself," he said; "and that I should see her at this moment is indispensable. How to find her sooner, I know not; and better lose a few hours even in this exigence, than offend her by a premature attempt to force myself on her presence."

Long, therefore, before noon—long before the town of Lirkwall was agitated by the news of the events on the other side of the island, the eldest Mertoun was pacing the deserted aisle of the Cathedral, awaiting, with agonizing eagerness, the expected communication from Norna. The bell tolled twelve—no door opened—no one was seen to enter the Cathedral; but the last sounds had ceased to reverberate though the vaulted roof, when, gliding from one of the interior side-aisles, Norna stood before him. Mertoun indifferent to the apparant mystery of her sudden approach, (with the secret of which the reader is acquainted,) went up to her at once, with the earnest ejaculation—"Ulla—Ulla Troil—aid me to save our unhappy boy!"

"To Ulla Troil," said Norna, "I answer not—I gave the names to the winds, on the night that cost me a father!"

"Speak not of that night of horror," said Mertoun; "we have need of our reason—let us not think on recollections which may destroy it; but aid me, if thou canst, to save our unfortunate child!"

"Vaughan," answered Norna, "he is already saved—long since saved; think you a mother's hand—and that of such a mother as I am—would await your crawling, tardy, ineffectual assistance? No, Vaughan—I make myself known to you, but to show my triumph over you—it is the only revenge which the powerful Norna permits herself to take for the wrongs of Ulla Troil."

"Have you indeed saved him—saved him from the murderous crew?" said Mordaunt, or Vaughan—"speak!—and speak truth!—I will believe every thing—all you would require me to assent to!—prove to me only he is escaped and safe!"

"Escaped and safe, by my means," said Norna—"safe, and in assurance of an honored and happy alliance. Yes, great unbelievers?—yes, wise and self-opinioned infidel!—these were the words of Norna! I knew you many a year since; but never had I made myself known to you, save with the triumphant consciousness of having controlled the destiny that threatened my son. All combined against him planets which threatened drowning—combinations which menaced blood—but my skill was superior to all.—I arranged—I combined—I found means—I made them—each disaster has been averted; and what infidel on earth, or stubborn demon beyond the bounds of earth, shall hereafter deny my power?"

Who Pays the Duty on Horses?

Under this heading Jacob Kalleper writes: It is curious to see how ready some people are to believe that the poor Canadian has to pay the duty in all cases. If he is a buyer he pays it as consumer, and if a seller he pays it as producer, according to the wise lights of our Opposition political economists. But the laws of trade give no warrant for such thimble-rigging.

It would have been much nearer the truth if the Yankee horse buyer had said that only for the duty he would sell to the American consumer at 20 per cent. less price, and make more money as trade would be greatly increased and expenses reduced. The levelling of price would be done at the other end of the transaction, not at this.

The United States cannot produce horses as cheaply as we can, and the demand always exceeds the supply; and so long as there is no duty the cost of the home bred article is regulated by the price of Canadian horses, with freight and charges added. When they put on a duty it is simply one more item in the list of charges and forms part of the price at the point of delivery, just as much as the freight.

The increased cost stimulates home production and so far lessens the demand on foreign supplies, but this increased production depends solely on higher prices being obtainable for the whole number of horses bred at home. If nine-tenths of the horses required are home bred their breeders are not such fools as to take no notice of a heavy duty imposed, and go on selling at prices which ruled when there was no duty, leaving only the one tenth to be supplied at what the foreign article can be supplied for, duty added.

On the contrary, they at once see that there being more buyers than sellers, they are masters of the situation, and at once advance the price to what the Canadian horse can be sold for after paying freight, duty and other charges.

There are elementary principles of universal application. The consumer pays the duty unless its effect is such as to create a healthy home competition which neutralizes the effect of the duty and gives the country imposing it the benefit of being their own producers as well as consumers.

A HUMOROUS DECISION.—Dr. Moore, of Kingston, Ont., while visiting at Westville, N. S., recently, filled the place of a brother physician, who wanted a holiday. He was not registered under the Nova Scotia Medical Act, and Dr. Sutherland had him cited before two justices for violating the law, the penalty for which is $200. The justices reserved their decision and sent a note to Dr. Moore to this effect:—"If you will produce your diploma from any chartered medical college and pay the expenses of the suit and give $10 into the Young Men's Christian Association building fund this trouble will be ended forever." At latest accounts the Dr. had not sufficiently recovered from his surprise to give a definite answer to the humorous decision.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind mar 8 eod & wky

DESTROYED BY FIRE.—The Town Hall at Arnprior, Ont., containing all the fire apparatus, with the exception of the hook and ladder outfit, was totally destroyed by fire at 2 o'clock on Tuesday morning. The loss is estimated at $10,000; partly covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

TEA AT MONTAGUE.—Please bear in mind that on the 27th of June next the Tea of the season will be held at Montague, in aid of the Methodist Church, which it is expected will then be well on towards completion. Notices of special attractions to the Tea will appear in the papers in due time. 1m—mch15
