Meanwhile, the coup leaders, Maj.-Gen. Duong Van Duc and Brig.-Gen. Lam Van Phat, apparently ordered some of their forces out of the capital.

AGREEMENT CLAIMED
One general supporting the coup claimed agreement was reached by the two sides not to fight.

The exact whereabouts of Phat and Duc were a mystery, but reports indicated they were in hiding.

They were reported greatly worried about the apparent rallying by other units in support of Khanh.

Air Commodore Ky said two of four army corps fully supported Khanh while one, the 2nd Corps surrounding Saigon, was in a difficult position.

SAIGON OCCUPIED
He said this was because troops from the rebellious 4th Corps had occupied Saigon, including 3rd Corps headquarters.

Other loyal units included marines, paratroopers, a ranger and the navy, even though paratroop and ranger elements took part in the coup under Phat.

Ky told reporters Khanh was prepared to fight if necessary.

He said Khanh was prepared to talk with generals Duc and Phat, who would be given safe conduct if they asked for it.

Asked whether Khanh would meet the coup leaders on neutral ground, he said: "No, he's still the prime minister. Why should he go to neutral ground to talk?"

FLEW OVER CITY
Helicopters and fighter planes flew over Saigon this morning but the city remained quiet. Troops stationed near the Roman Catholic cathedral
