

SHORT SKIRT FORMALITY

Despite all the fuss about the floor-length evening dress, the short-skirted variety is still doing nicely, especially in the new resort collections. Cell Chapman, a fine hand with any type of dress, is responsible for this beauty. It's a sprightly short formal in pink organza. The skirt and bodice glist with giant delicately embroidered flower sprays. There are four tiny straps at each shoulder.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Pretty Scenes To See Looking Out The Window

"Will there be lilacs?" we chuckled to James at supper. We had drawn the table up to a window so that we could enjoy the winter scenes beyond, and our eyes had chanced to rest a moment on a lilac bush in the flower-border, cold and leafless. But it came to mind, not bare. Twigs fetchingly twin-budded, gave good promise of blossom and a Springtide to come.

James let his glance range farther afield — to the tall sturdy spruces below the milldam, to the hills above that have ever been a part of his living, to the fields white-spread and rosy as caressed now by the afterglow. "Yes, Ellen," he replied soberly "there will be lilacs and Springtimes long after this, in years that you and I will never know." Never know? It was a "forever" thought. Should we not even while our eternity endures, return in some wreath of a shade to walk the old paths? As the children say when they have a great longing over some outing, we would "just have to." Sometime, when Spring is on the hillsides, and the world about clad in fresh sunny greens; when Summer's lushness wastes, and a million blossoms wash faces in the morning-dew; when Autumn touches a bit sadly the trees, the fields and the woodlands with her shades of enchantment; and should we not love to see again even leaving some fairer or less fair beyond, the soft of the metallic white and sparkle of Winter in all its silence and tranquility along the length and breadth of the farmlands? And then go back to have that eternity sweeter for the spirit's seekings? As home "be it ever so humble" is dearer always after one has wandered.

Thoughts go out these days to those of late called upon to mourn the loss of a loved one. And we remember that even as we first-foot into the New Year's paths, the proving-grounds appear near or farther in the distance, or maybe only around the first bend of way. And sorrowing hearts though "not without hope" are left to recall now-treasured words and smiles of the happier days. And Death, a term we would leave out of our vocabulary is changed to a gentler meaning when we consider the next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Elmer Younker. Lunch committee, Mrs. Lorne Smith; Mrs. Heber Barrett and Mrs. Willard Proud. The meeting closed with the benediction. Lunch was served by the hostess and the committee in charge.

LET'S EAT

Most Homemakers Watch Pennies In Food Buying

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Each year the Chef and I spend some time visiting various sections of our country, chatting with homemakers from all walks of life—the rich, not-so-rich, professional or business career women, young mothers and wives of retired men.

In every case, we have found that the homemaker was interested in getting the best value for the money she spent for food. An overwhelming majority were interested in close buying and saving on unnecessary expenditures for food.

This is quite a refreshing and different slant from the generally accepted theory in some business circles that homemakers don't mind what they spend for food and that money is no object. It is a bright spot on the home economic horizon to know that the majority of homemakers are still watching pennies.

Tomorrow's Dinner: Minestrone Bread Sticks; Fish Fillet Pie Potato Topping; Buttered Beets;

Celery-Lettuce Salad; Jellied Banana - Peach Halves, Coffee, tea or milk. All measurements are level. Recipes proportioned to serve 4.

Fish Fillet Pie Potato Topping: Barely cook 1 1/2 lbs. fresh or frozen fish fillets, any kind, with boiling water. Add 1/4 tsp. salt, 1 bay leaf and 1 slice lemon. Simmer 12 to 15 min. or until the fish begins to flake.

Drain. Save the liquid. Coarse-flake in small bite-sized pieces. Melt 2 1/2 tbsps. butter or margarine.

Stir in 2 1/2 tbsps. enriched flour, 1/2 tsp. celery salt, 1/2 tsp. pepper, 1/4 tsp. thyme and 1 tsp. scraped onion juice. Slow - stir in 1 1/2 c. milk and 1/2 c. fish liquid.

When boiling, stir in the fish. Transfer to a buttered shallow 3-pt. baking dish. Cover with 3 c. fluffy mashed potato. Brush with 1 tbsps. melted butter or margarine. Bake 20 min. in a hot oven, 400 degrees F.

Border with heated green peas; Jellied Banana - Peach Halves: Make up 1 pkg. prepared orange-lemon or lime gelatin according to label directions.

Rinse an 8-in. square pan with mixture to the depth of 1/4". Chill 20 min. or until beginning to thicken.

On this, arrange the drained contents 1 (No. 2) can peach halves, rounded - side up. In between, tuck thin slices of 1 ripe banana. Spoon in remaining gelatin to cover the fruit. Chill 3 hrs. or until very firm.

To serve, cut in squares, a peach in the centre of each. Top with 1/2 pt. heavy cream, beaten stiff with 1/2 a mashed ripe small banana, 1 tbsps. sugar and 1 tsp. lemon juice. Or use whipped evaporated milk, sweetened to taste. Favor with lemon juice and combined with 1/2 ripe banana, thin-sliced.

Trick of the Chef: Brush commercial bread sticks with egg white, dust with sesame seed or poppy seed and a few onion flakes and slow-bake 10 min. at 325 degrees F.

Right Hips Are Larger

The authority for this statement is a 70-year-old Sydney man, Leslie Guard, who has just retired after 49 years as a woman's tailor.

Guard thinks women have much better figures than they did 50 years ago, but "there are still some very odd shapes among them." In his tailoring lifetime Guard made clothes for the Duchesses of Gloucester and many other well-known women.

He found only one way to lock this problem. First off, I forced myself to sit down and eat a substantial and balanced breakfast. This included one or two eggs, a piece of toast, a small dish of dietetic apricots and a cup of coffee.

Midway in your letter, here condensed, you say (apropos your first delaying response to the man's marriage offer): "I wanted to make sure I wasn't just a refuge, and a haven, when he needed someone to turn to." Then you add: "Thank God he turned to me, as he would have been easy prey for an unscrupulous woman."

The sequence of these comments suggests that you weren't in love when the man first proposed; thus you felt free to counsel delay in magnanimous language. But now your emotions are deeply invested, as the man knows, which tends to give him control of the situation—and food for second thoughts.

The crux of the tacit conflict is your senior age. I suspect it isn't an asset now that the balance of power has passed to the man—as both of you recognize, in the back of your minds. Likely it is consciousness of this factor that makes you urgent, and him cagey at this point.

My advice is: settle cordially for marriage in the Spring; but in case of further postponements, have done with him. M.H.

MARY HAWORTH

Widow Meets Sad Widower

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a widow, 53, small and good looking; have two lovely married daughters, a good job and my own apartment. My problem concerns a recent widower, a few years my junior (as he knows)—who asked to marry me, soon after he lost his wife.

I had known him casually in business for about 12 years. Five months ago during a sales transaction, he mentioned that his wife had just died after a lengthy illness. I expressed sympathy.

Shortly afterward he telephoned one evening (knowing I am a widow) and asked to take me out. Being lonely, I consented, and have been enjoying his company since. He is in a sad state, as I could appreciate (having been through such sorrow myself); and after a few months he asked to marry me. Much as I wanted to, I asked him to wait six months—feeling that was the descent thing.

Now he still wants to marry me, and I've met his family, and mine is happy for me; and I know his intentions are honorable. But he wants to wait until Spring for financial reasons (due to expenses of his wife's last illness). I've told him I would be willing to continue working for a while after marriage, so that we may marry sooner.

He insists on seeing me every day, to which I am not averse—but, as can be imagined, it plays havoc with my emotional stability. I know he has his masculine pride; but my happiness is involved too. Please advise, K.G.

Dear K.G.: There is confusion here. For example, you say the man first mentioned his wife's death five months ago, and started dating you soon after. A few months later, he proposed marriage; and you responded by asking him to wait six months.

Well, your letter was written in mid-November, which implies that he made his first bid for your interest in June; and the dating companionship would have started around July. And "a few months" time-lapse, after July, would bring us to October, approximately.

Thus, if he proposed marriage in October, and you suggested waiting six months, that would signify a Springtime wedding as your choice, wouldn't it? April is the sixth month after October. Hence I wonder—why your anxiety about the man's present position.

KEEP IN TRIM

Homemakers Try New Solution For Weight

By IDA JEAN KAIN

When food is handy, the tendency is to eat to solve problems not created by hunger—bringing on the added problem of overweight. Doctors term this "feasting" pattern of snatching at food all day long be broke?

The way the young woman in today's story worked out the solution shows real fortitude. Her words have a ring of conviction. "I have two children, ages 3 and 4. We have had two years of almost constant sickness, and during this time I found I gained weight steadily although I ate few good meals because of the worry and strain that pressed me. My doctor explained that many women gain the most weight during trying periods. They snatch at food all through the day to assuage anxiety."

"I found only one way to lock this problem. First off, I forced myself to sit down and eat a substantial and balanced breakfast. This included one or two eggs, a piece of toast, a small dish of dietetic apricots and a cup of coffee."

The time when a snack is needed is in the late afternoon when the blood sugar level tends to fall. An energy boost at that time prevents an all-gone feeling and curbs the appetite for dinner.

This kind of information can be most helpful to other overweight. Skipping breakfast almost always results in piece-meal eating on food which furnishes calories but not essential nutrients. An adequate breakfast is a diet-saver and the best way to deal with the nervous habit of snatching at food all through the day. Besides stepping up metabolism early in the day, the first meal of the day sets the pattern and helps to establish regularity of eating hours.

Use Black Light To Pick Babies

By ALTON BLAKESLEE

NEW YORK (AP)—Invisible ink and black light are proposed as a new fool-proof system to avoid mix-ups of newborn babies in hospitals.

The ink is a safe chemical bleach. With it, names and identifying marks are written on both the baby's and mother's skin at the moment of birth.

This writing shows up only when exposed to ultraviolet or black light. It wears off completely soon after mother and child leave the hospital.

The system is proposed by Dr. Herman Goodman, New York dermatologist, in a new book, Identification of the Newly Born Medical Lay Press.

MIX-UPS RARE Baby mix-ups are rare, but still happen, he writes. Even the possibility causes worry. The actual event can bring heartaches. Unintentional switching of babies in one of the major plots in fiction. Many methods of identifying the baby with its mother have been used or proposed. These include taking the baby's footprint, wearing beaded necklaces spelling out names, plastic sheaths over the wrist carrying an insert of identifying data, visible inks, and invisible inks.

A trouble with invisible inks in the past is that many of them wash off easily. Dr. Goodman writes. Now there are safe new ones that don't wear off or wash off during the time the baby is in the hospital.

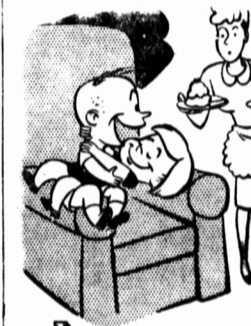

Inks made of chemical bleaches commonly used in soaps, dentrifices and rinses are especially suitable, the physician says. The mother's name, hospital admission number and other identifying marks can be written on the arms of baby and mother even while they are still joined by the placental cord. Other methods of identification can be used additionally.

At any time the marks can be seen by shining harmless black light upon the writing. This is checked especially at the time mother and baby go home.
