Britain Buying Little Wheat As Stocks Ample

(The following review of Britain's position in the current international wheat market is by Sydney Campbell, Reuters financial editor. It reflects the viewpoint of British importers.)

By SYDNEY GAMPELL LONDON (Reuters)—Britain is buying very little Canadian or any other wheat at present because the millers are already covered for the bulk of their requirements up to or beyond the end of this year. Seeing a world-wide glut of wheat which is overwhelming, they are in no hurry to buy the small remainder of their needs. The link of a world wheat market to the high United States support price may prevent much further fall. But as there is little to indicate that prices can rise, nobody in Britain or any other importing country feels any hurry to buy.

Latest U. S. Idea One of Washington's latest ideas is said to be to confine the supports to wheat used for food inside the United States, leaving export wheat prices to find their own level. If anything came of this idea, export prices could fall far below the present level. Britain's position is the current international wheat market is by Sydney Campbell, Reuters financial editor. It reflects the viewpoint of British importers.)

Mr. and Mrs. Murchison MacEachern were week-end visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. MacEachern, Nine Mile Creek.

Rev. John L. Wright was the preacher at the evening service in the church at Victoria, on August 30. The choir was under the direction of Mrs. Allison Lea, with Miss Baxter, soloist. Mr. Wright is leaving on return to resume his work at High River, Alberta, following an enjoyable visit among relatives and friends in his native Province.

At the services of public worship in other parts of this field, close attention was given to the subject: "Forgetting the things which are behind, I press forward," and the general participation in the singing of the old familiar hymns, led by full choirs under the direction of the church organs, combined to make these services enjoyable.

ANGLO RUSTICO W. I. Mrs. Noel Hooper entertained the Anglo Rustico W. I. at her home at their monthly meeting. Roll call was answered by five members and two visitors were welcomed. Twenty-nine dollars and forty-one cents were realized from pantry sales at Cavendish. Seven members subscribed to the Institute news.

U. S. and Britain would be the only importing country without an obligation to take it at that price. For the present, this idea is academic. Britain's abstention from the agreement has probably little to do with bringing about the present position.

For whatever little they can sell commercially, there is no indication that the North Americans intend to slash their price. However small the export market may be, they are not convinced that it would be correspondingly larger, or any larger, if they cut their price.

Large Stocks on Hand With the British home-grown crop and the releases of imported wheat from the government's stocks, millers in Britain are already covered for two-thirds of all their requirements up to the end of 1953 without buying any wheat abroad. If the Canadian Wheat Board would sell the top grades, hard wheat in the way that buyers want, some of those grades would be bought.

But the Canadian Wheat Board, though it has more than enough wheat to sell, does not at present offer it in a way acceptable to importers. As the board is a monopoly and an arbitrary seller, it could hold the buyers by holding its quotation up to the date of fixing the price, and then dropping the quotation on the next day. Even if it is too scrupulous to do so, no buyer likes to leave himself at the mercy of an overseas selling monopoly.

Short of Money Even if the Canadian Wheat Board offered freely, there are several other reasons why British millers would probably buy only sparingly. They are short of finances, since the money that the government paid them for the stocks requisitioned at the outbreak of war would buy only about a fifth as much wheat. They have nowhere to hedge the risk of a fall in price. After a lengthy market was indefinitely deferred, because storage is glutted with stocks and arrivals of government-owned wheat. Since the Liverpool futures market is to be the basis of wheat in store, it cannot reopen until there is some space to put privately-owned wheat into store. The rigadoun is a dance at least as old as the 17th century in the south of France.
