

Big Country Home Provided For PM

OTTAWA (CP) — With a rare show of heart-warming unanimity, the Commons members waded through legislation providing for a 13.4-acre country home for Canada's prime minister.

The property is on three-mile-long Harrington Lake, deep in a quiet glade of the Gatineau Hills about 25 miles north of here in neighboring Quebec. Princess Margaret stayed there during a visit last year.

The two-storey, seven-bedroom lodge was built in 1925 at a cost of about $100,000. The National Capital Commission, federal agency responsible for carrying out a master plan to make the Ottawa area beautiful, has owned the property as part of Gatineau National Park since 1951.

Works Minister Green, Government House leader, introduced the legislation and Rodolphe Leduc (L-Gatineau)—in whose constituency the property is located—and H. W. Herring (OCF—Kootenay West) welcomed it on behalf of their parties.

NAME LOST?

Difficulties arose when Alexis Caron (L-Hull) said that in his boyhood, when he used to swim in it, the lake was known as Lac Mousseau. When and why had it been named Harrington?

"They robbed us of a name and I would like a restitution," he said.

The ensuing discussion, at times noisy, drew in a number of members. J. W. Pickersgill (L-Bonaville-Twillington) came up with a compromise that was finally accepted by all — Lac Mousseau was inserted in brackets after Harrington Lake in the bill.

Mr. Green said only 13.4 acres of the 4,296 acres of Gatineau Park in the vicinity of the lake will go with the house. There would be no restriction on fishing or other uses of the lake by others.

The Harrington lodge comes under the same act as the official Ottawa residence provided for the prime minister at 24 Sussex Street in 1950.

Geneva Abandonment 'Should Be Resisted'

By GRAHAM TROTTER
Canadian Press Staff Writer
PRINCETON, N.J. (CP) — The Western powers should resist the temptation to abandon forthwith the negotiations at the Geneva foreign ministers conference, Prime Minister Diefenbaker said here.

Addressing the 212th commencement exercises of Princeton University, which bestowed on him an honorary degree of doctor of laws, Diefenbaker told an audience of 5,000:

"Western rights are clear and the Western cause is just, and it is to be hoped therefore that the principal Western negotiators will continue to exercise patience in probing every possibility of making even minor progress in reducing the area of disagreement which separates the East from the West."

The Geneva talks had at least shown "how modest must be the expectations and hopes of the Western world" in such negotiations.

They also had demonstrated that the Western powers are "united in their determination not to abandon their rights or the people of West Berlin."

TEN OTHERS HONORED

Diefenbaker was among 11 persons receiving honorary degrees. Marian Anderson, internationally-known American contralto and U.S. delegate to the United Nations general assembly, received an honorary doctorate of humanities.

Diefenbaker was the sixth Canadian to be so honored by Princeton, the others including Governor-General Vincent Massey, Opposition Leader Lester B. Pearson and the late Sidney Smith, former external affairs minister.

Speaking of the U. S. First World War president, Woodrow Wilson, Diefenbaker said he was the voice of the conscience of democracy — his advocacy not narrow or nationalistic. He endeavored to bring together in unity and co-operation the nations which believed in democracy.

"That message is vital today," the prime minister said. "It is a message which the United States and Canada prize in their relationship." The price of freedom was co-operation and the prize of co-operation was freedom.

GULFS TO SPAN

Broad gulfs between the developed and the undeveloped regions of the world had to be spanned to achieve peace. The free nations must continue to offer help to the underdeveloped nations, not in the spirit of charity but of co-operation.

"It is one of the sternest trials of western leadership," Diefenbaker said, "to make transpar-

Vincent Newson Opens Shop For Electrical Sales, Service

Well-known Charlottetown electrician Vincent S. Newson has opened an electrical contracting and servicing business on the premises formerly occupied by Chappell Electric on Queen Street in Charlottetown. Mr. Chappell has now established himself in another location in the city as an electrical consultant engineer.

EXPERIENCED

Born in Brackley, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Emma Newson, Mr. Newson was educated in the Brackley district. In 1948 he commenced his apprenticeship for electrician and spent the first two years with the firm operated by James MacKay in Brackley.

The next two years of his training was taken with Good Electric on what is now Kirkwood Drive. Obtaining his apprentice certificate, Mr. Newson then went to the employ of Sten Electric, where he held the position of foreman for approximately seven years.

To supplement his knowledge of the trade Vincent completed one-year course at the Charlottetown Vocational School. In addition he took three separate courses in major electrical household appliances, which were conducted in Charlottetown under the sponsorship of various manufacturers.

These courses covered the general servicing of all household heating, laundry and refrigeration appliances.

Mr. Newson is married to the former Helen Chappell daughter of the founder of the business, which occupied the site, the late Fred J. Chappell and Mrs. Chappell.

In the initial stages Mr. Newson will have in his employ one journeyman electrician and one electrician's helper. One of these positions will be filled by Mr. Newson's brother Brewster, who recently completed his apprenticeship and is now awaiting the result of his examination for journeyman electrician.

he was touring here in 1958 Connor wrote a column falsely implying he was a homosexual. Connor, 50, has denied he meant to suggest that, and argued that his highly critical article was fair comment.

Gardiner argued in the crowded court room that Liberace "appears to have a bee in his bonnet about people charging him with homosexuality."

He said it was fantastic to suppose that the "ordinary reasonable" Mirror reader would have read Connor's column and then said: "Oh, I never knew that Mr. Liberace went to bed with men."

Biggest British Newspaper Faces Liberace Libel Threat

LONDON (Reuters) — Liberace's lawyer made a sharp attack on Britain's biggest daily newspaper Tuesday in asking a high court jury to bring in a heavy libel judgment against the paper.

Gilbert Beyfus, summing up before the case's scheduled presentation to the jury of 10 men and two women today, called the London Daily Mirror "vicious and violent, venomous and vindictive, salacious and sensational, ruthless and remorseless."

The Mirror has a circulation of nearly 5,000,000.

The lawyer for the American television pianist said it was time Mirror columnist William Connor, also a target of Liberace's libel suit, was taught the danger of words and halted "this incessant rudeness which apparently pays off so well in the journalistic profession."

Mirror lawyer Gerald Gardiner also talked to the jury before Justice Cyril Salmon began charging it in the sixth day of the entertainer's suit against the paper and Connor.

WINDS UP TODAY

The judge is to wind up his charge this morning and then hand the case to the jurors. As is the custom under British law, damages sought are not specified in advance.

Liberace, 40, charges that when entirely clear that there is no intention to control, to interfere, or to bring about any alteration in the ideas or objectives of the nations and peoples to whom co-operation is offered."

Best Wishes for Success!
