What is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food?

In appearance Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is an oval, chocolate coated pill. In the condensed form it contains all of nature's most strengthening and invigorating tonic and restoratives and for this reason it is unsurpassed as a blood builder and nerve restorative. It cures all diseases caused by thin blood and exhausted nerves and makes pale, weak nervous men, women and children strong and healthy. 50 cents a box.

Many a young couple start house-keeping with a large stock of ideals and a small income.

A Good Stomach.

Is essential to health and happiness, but don't blame the stomach for biliousness. It is deranged, and causes poisonous bile to remain in the blood causing indigestion, headache and irregular action of the bowels. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills regulate the liver, kidneys and bowels and by their direct action on these organs effect prompt and lasting cures of biliousness, dyspepsia, headache and all kidney ailments. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers.

Admiral Lord Seymour was in Halifax last January, when the Canadian soldiers, artillery and mounted rifles were leaving for South Africa. He was one of the speakers at the monster farewell meeting tendered the soldiers in the drill hall. He is an elderly man with a grey head and beard, and distinguished appearance.—Halifax Chronicle.

NEW ARMY UNIFORMS.

Hereafter there will be no thin red line. It will be a thin line of mud-color, says the London Daily Mail.

Working days, fighting days, ordinary everyday, the British soldier will be clothed in that ugly neutral tint that does not show itself against the rock or the burnt grass of the veldt in South Africa when there is a kopje to be carried. Khaki is the color of the future.

The Daily Mail has the highest authority for stating that the uniform of the future will be khaki. All arms—horse, foot and dragoons, artillery, and army service, officer and private—they are all to wear that monotonous, uninteresting color.

Never a war but leaves its impression on the details of army service. This war is to abolish the red coat.

At the same time the army is not to lose its butterfly tints entirely. It would be a national calamity and a check to the recruiting-sergeant's industry if the red broad-cloth were to be wholly a vanishing quantity. The war office realises to the full the value of a red splash of color in the black-coated crowd of a London street. So the soldier's costume is to have a two-fold existence. The red coat is to emerge from its khaki chrysalis on Sundays and holidays and at any other time when he is intended to be a spectacle and not a working soldier, as, for instance, on dress parades.

The army is to have a full-dress uniform with red coats, more striking, more distinguished than his present red coat. It is to be much more finely frogged, much more fully tasselled than ever a uniform was in all the army's history. But for commercial purposes—still the khaki.

THE BILLYCOCK HAT.

Khaki, also, is to be the hat of the future, and moreover, it is to be a type unknown in history. No more nor no less than a khaki billycock hat is the war office answer to the disaster at Aldershot last week. Tommy in a billycock hat will be a feature of the London streets as soon as Lord Roberts has put an end to the South African campaign. Also the billycock hat is likely to carry with it a species of awning, carried on whalebone rafters and protecting from the novel helmet. That, of course, is only for field-days and days of exposure to the sun. But, when the new methods develop, it may be taken as certain that there will be no more field-days of fatalities.

COMMON-SENSE AT LAST.

The present war in South Africa is showing the nearest approach the British army has ever made to rational dress in the field. It seems almost incredible in these days of easy and serviceable khaki, for instance, that the Life Guards fought at Waterloo in scarlet coats, light blue overalls with gold stripes down the sides, and heavy brazen helmets of old Roman pattern, with a black bearskin crest and a red, yellow and blue "hackle feather."

Cuirasses which are now only worn for show were introduced some time after, being first worn at the coronation of King George the Fourth.

A hugh bearskin cap—like that now worn by the footguards, but nearly twice as big—was introduced in the Household Cavalry in the reign of William IV. This was replaced by the present pattern of helmet in the early reign of Queen Victoria.

At last we have got to the realm of common sense. In one particular we might with benefit copy the rifleman's uniform of a century ago. All the rifle corps at that date wore green—and it was often practically invisible to the foe.

A Pretoria telegram of June 27th says:—The issue of a new sheet yesterday afternoon—the first since June 11—had a good effect in giving the people a chance to discuss the Chinese trouble and other news from the outside world. It also had the effect of abating the feeling among groups of hundreds of disarmed burglars in the streets and squares, whose sole topic of conversation heretofore has been the situation in the Transvaal. The state of affairs has thereby changed materially.

The opinion of the foreign military attaches who have returned to Cape Town from the front is that the war is over, and that Presidents Kruger and Steyn will soon surrender.
