MARY HAWORTH

Loveless Are Teachable If They Aspire To Learn

Dear Mary Haworth: Can you help me? I am a girl 18 and enjoy people an awful lot?

I met a very nice boy this last summer and have been seeing him ever since.

Jim is a very intelligent person and comes of a wealthy intellectual family. The problem is, he seems to have everything but the ability to love, or indeed to hate or, in fact, have any kind of deep feeling about anything, or for anyone.

All he wants is to consume all the knowledge that he can possibly grasp.

Maybe the fact that both of his parents are successful lawyers has something to do with it. I doubt very much if they have shown him love or affection to any extent.

Can a person like Jim be taught to love? If he can, and if it is within my power to help him, will you please tell me what I can do? Thank you.—S.J.

Dear S.J.: Two books have lately come to my attention, bearing on your question, namely: Can loveless adults be taught to love? Both books are analytically oriented and both are translated from the French language.

The gist of their collective answer seems to be: The loveless adult may learn to love, at least in some degree, if he intelligently aspires to learn and will apply himself perseveringly.

But he cannot be taught to love against his will, or in the fact of lethargic indifference to such achievement.

Just last evening, as it happens, long hours after I should have been asleep, I was struggling to escape the fascination of a volume titled "The Psychology of Loving" (Helicon Press) by Ignace Lepp, a practising European psychologist.

The second book, which I've been reading more or less simultaneously, is Marc Oraison's "Man and Wife: The Physical and Spiritual Foundations of Marriage" (MacMillan Paperbacks).

But back to Dr. Lepp's book: In the introduction he remarks that "Those persons who really know how to love are actually even rarer than those who really know how to think..."

He also states: "When we declare a man is happy— and the more so when we declare that a woman is happy—we are seldom referring to the degree of perfection they have attained in the acquisition of rational truth." (Here is an eye- opener for your beau!)

"To declare that someone is happy," continues Dr. Lepp, "is to signify that he is, or that we suppose him to be, enjoying the height of emotional fulfillment."

The purpose of Dr. Lepp's book, as he explains is "to help people to love, to help them to love in a better way and to show them how to face up to the suffering that comes from the absence of love..."

Dr. Lepp says: "In the rationalistic civilization in which we live, the reason so many adults love so poorly— to their own harm, to the harm of those close to them and of humanity in general— is that the importance of teaching the young how to develop their emotional potentials is so little understood."

He maintains that "affectivity (emotional liveness) as much if not more than intelligence, has need of being educated..."

Oraison's book "Man and Wife" is more tedious reading, addressed primarily to Christian considerations in family planning. It deeply affirms every child's right and need to be reared in an atmosphere of fully reciprocal, securely integrated parental love.

Oraison holds that man is by nature selfish, hence "must spend his days rooting out of himself, painfully, if need be, the narcissistic indolence which is in him."

He says that man "must make a powerful act of faith in the eventual possibility of the development of his human resources (of caring), a developing which he can only faintly foresee," at first.— M.H.

LAC AND MRS. GEORGE MACDOUGALL

Ceremony Is Performed At St. Paul's, S'side

Alana Gayle, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Brown, Summerside, became the bride of Lac. George MacDougall, Shelburne, N.S., at a double ring ceremony performed at Saint Paul's Church, Summerside. Rev. Pierre Arsenault officiated, and celebrated the nuptial mass.

Mrs. Clarence Steele, organist, accompanied Mrs. Gertrude Cahill who sang "O Lord I Am Not Worthy" and "Prayer For Perfect Life" during the ceremony and "Hail Holy Queen" during the signing of the register.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor length portrait gown of misty nylon sheer. The bouffant skirt featured a front panel of deep tucks, demure scoop - necked bodice and traditional long sleeves lavished with schiffili embroidery, closing at wrists with tiny buttons. Her shoulder length veil of nylon tulle, worn over the face until the ceremony began, was held in place by a tiara of iridescent simulated crystals. She carried a bouquet of white and red roses with green fern in formation of a cross, with white satin bow and streamers.

Attending the bride as maid-of-honor was Joanne McNally. The senior bridesmaid was Judy McNally. They were similarly gowned in street length dresses of pale blue taffeta, white accessories and headpieces of tulle veils and large roses. They carried bouquets of tinted white, pink and blue flowers.

The three junior bridesmaids were Mrs. Mary Mullins, Joanne Poirier and Carolyn Bourque. They were identically gowned in street length dresses of pale blue nylon chiffon. White nylon - frilled caplets were worn over the shoulders. Headpieces of white tulle and roses were worn. Their flowers were pink white and red carnations.

The little flower girls were Karen Longaphie, cousin of the bride and Dawn Robins, who were dressed in white nylon chiffon with light blue sashes, and carried tiny baskets of white, red and blue petals. The ring - bearer was Michael Longaphie, cousin of the bride.

The groom was attended by L. A. C. Ted Gelinas. Ushers were Jack Brown, borther of the bride and L.A.C. Winston Locke.

The guest pews were marked with lilies - of - the - valley and white satin bows.

A reception was held at the Royal Canadian Legion home for approximately 80 guests.

Members of the wedding party and relatives formed a receiving line to greet the guests. The mother of the bride wore a gold shift dress with black accessories and a brown fur stole. Her corsage was of red and white carnations.

The grandmother of the bride Mrs. Thomas Brown wore a black and white silk dress and a corsage of white carnations. The guest book was circulated by Bonnie Palmer.

The bride's table was centered with a three - tiered wedding cake topped with miniature bride and groom and surrounded by an arrangement of white roses, tiny wedding bells and streamers. The cake was cut in the traditional manner.

Father Arsenault said grace, and the best man proposed a toast to the bride, which was responded to by the groom. The master of ceremonies was Ben Champion.

Congratulatory remarks were made by several guests and music was provided by pianist Dougie MacEwen.

Out - of - town guests included Patrick MacDougall, Shelburne, N.S.; Mr. and Mrs. Reg Longaphie, Karen Longaphie, Michael Longaphie, Wilfred LeClair, Barry LeClair, Frank LeClair, Judi McAssey, Brenda Howatt, Mrs. Wayne LeClair, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Mullins, Gordie Ferguson and Dougie MacEwen all of Charlottetown.

The young couple left for St. John's, Newfoundland where the groom is stationed with the RCAF.

For travelling the bride wore a three - piece red velvet suit with white satin blouse, red velvet accessories and a corsage of white carnations.

Prior to her wedding the bride was honored showers at her home and at the home of Mrs. Maurice Blacquiere.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Buffet Dinner Delights Young College Students

ALMOST "scared" of the "young sophisticates" when they return home for the holiday vacation? The girls may be over - made - up and the boys' talk and manners may be a bit "smart" and over - casual, but under this thin veneer they are the same boys and girls. And they're hoping that you, too, are the same.

They will be delighted with the idea of inviting home-town friends in for a kitchen buffet supper, with a menu that includes both traditional and gourmet - type foods.

Dancing's On The Menu

Of course they will select some new recordings — for dancing is special fun during the holiday season. So roll up your rugs and lay them along the walls for seats.

Square dancing is still popular, and more than a bit of fun. Anyone with husky lungs and a sense of humor can learn to "call off." Most libraries have books containing the rhyming jingles still popular in country districts. Or let the recordings do it!

"A 'kitchen buffet' is literally a buffet party set up on kitchen counters, table and top of-range for hot foods," explains our Chef. "If they're going to stand long before serving the dishes should be put into pans of hot water on the range, or be wise, and add a Bain Marie (Marie's bath is named for the French girl who invented it).

How It's Made

A tinsmith can make it for you. It is merely a tin pan, about 24 inches long, 12 inches wide and 6 inches deep, that can be filled a third full of simmering (not boiling) water; casseroles and other foods to be kept warm are covered and placed in it.

Why shouldn't the water boil? You all know the answer, Mesdames. It would continue to cook the foods instead of just keeping them hot!"

BUFFET DINNER

French Mushroom
Soup - in - Bowls
Baked Bean
'Cold-Cuts'
Cherry Tomatoes
Warm Mincemeat Pie
or
Frozen Strawberry Ripple
Coffee, Tea, Milk, Cider

Measurements level; recipes for 6

BAKED BEANS
"COLD CUTS"
CIRCLE PLATTER

Heat 3 (1 lb.) cans of New England baked beans with 2 tsp. vinegar and 2 tbsp. butter; meantime slightly saute cold cuts and saute brown bread, cut ¼ inch thick, in butter or margarine.

To arrange, use large round platter or good-size tray. Heap beans in center; encircle with hot "cold cuts", and on edge overlap sauteed brown bread slices. Garnish with pickles.

FROZEN STRAWBERRY RIPPLE

1 qt. vanilla ice cream
8 oz. frozen strawberries
pureed or blendored
1-3 c. fine chopped pecans or toasted almonds

Cut ice cream in irregular chunks. Pack into refreigerator freezing tray. Pour strawberry puree over and around pieces for marbled effect. Dust all over with nutmeats.

Freeze at lowest temperature until firm, 1 to 2 hrs.

FRENCH MUSHROOM SOUR FROM THE CHEF

Mesdames: Here is the recipe for an elegant alternate for the more familiar French onion soup; perfect for a buffet supper or to serve after skating or skiing, late in the vening.

You will need: 3 tsp. butter, 1 thin - sliced small onion, 2¾ c. sliced tender mushrooms and stems, 1-3 tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. powdered nutmeg, 3 (10½ oz.) cans condensed consommne, 3 tbsp. brandy (optional), 6 thick slices French bread, ½ c. butter (additional', ¾ c. grated Gruyere or other cheese and 2 tbsp. minced fresh parsley.

Melt butter in heavy 2-qt. saucepan. Add onion and mushrooms. Slow - saute until color turns. Add consomme plus salt and nutmeg, and 3 can-measures boiling water. Simmer until mushrooms are soft. Add brandy if desired.

Meantime saute French bread soup into pottery bowls and float cheesed slice of bread atop each serving. Dust with minced fresh parsley.

BAN SLACKS

TORONTO (CP)—The Board of Education of suburban Etobicoke has decided to ban the wearing of slacks by schoolgirls. Chairman W. F. Graydon said: "It is the form-revealing type of clothing we do not wish to have worn in the classroom."
