Manganese Bronze.

An extensive use of manganese bronze in the form of sheets for mining screens is noted on account of the acid mine waters having no action on it. For rolling into sheets a mixture containing more copper and manganese and less zinc is now employed. It is also found that a substitute for German silver can be made by the use of manganese, the different metals and their proportions being as follows: Copper, 67.25; manganese, 18.50; zinc, 13; aluminium, 1.25. The color of the metal produced by this amalgamation is pronounced very good for the uses to which it is put and resembles in a remarkable degree the article known by that name. It is also said to be fully as strong as the best German silver and has a superior casting quality, such as will be appreciated by foundrymen.

Gradual Development of the Mind.

Sir H. Holland says: "Whatever theory we hold as to the functions of the brain or mind it is certain that the powers of the brain are only gradually developed, and if forced into premature exercise they are impaired by the effort." This is a maxim, indeed, of great import, applying to the condition and culture of every faculty and function of body or of mind and singularly so to the memory, which forms in one sense the foundation of intellectual life. A regulated exercise, short of inducing fatigue, is improving to it, as indeed it is to all faculties and functions, but we are bound to refrain from gauding it by constant and laborious efforts in early life and before the instrument is strengthened to its work, or it decays in our hands.

RELIEF FOR SLEEP-FORSAKEN PILLOWS.

How often have you tossed and rolled about on a sleep-forsaken bed, until the small hours of the morning, unable to get rest or sleep—and arisen in the morning, tired and worn out? What a strain on the system has been this want of Nature's greatest restorer—sleep—and what a weakening effect it has had.
