Stella could not see anything inspiring about bolting an early dinner and then hurrying downtown, with a middle-aged man who was as good as married already, to crowd in a department store window for three hours and watch thirty thousand persons march past. She felt better, however, when she had escaped from her cramped position at the window and walked across Canal Street and down Royal and then through St. Louis to Antoine's.

The place cards had already been put around the table, and Stella surveyed these surreptitiously as she and the other girls took off their wraps. Raoul, Patty, Drew, Stella, Gail, Amelina, Richard, Clarinda, she read, going from right to left. Well, naturally, Raoul would give Patty the seat of honor under the circumstances, and also place Drew beside her. Certainly there was no reason why he should proclaim so insolently that he had nothing special to say to her by putting Clarinda at his left and giving her, Stella, the meaningless place at the table. Between Drew, whose courtesy to her would not for one moment hide his real absorption in Patty, and Gail, who had never meant anything in any girl's life, and probably never would.

Stella jerked out her chair and sat down, taking no part in the gay chatter that was going on around her. The door at the rear of the room was flung open by a beaming waiter of rubicund countenance, and Raoul, still in uniform, came into the room, followed by Drew, Gail and Richard. Raoul went first to Patty, greeting her with the affection which he would show a valued friend. Then he went gaily from Clarinda to Amelina, thanking them for coming. Reaching Stella last of all, he remarked that they were all immensely honored by having a prima donna at their little gathering and, seating himself at the head of the table, began to talk about the parade.

By the time the poulet en cocotte came on, everyone at the table, with the exception of Stella, had taken a lively part in the conversation. And now Raoul turned to her pointedly. "This is all mighty interesting, but haven't we had enough of this local talk now? Are the lights on Broadway as bright as ever, Stella?"

She accepted the remark as a challenge. "Brighter and brighter all the time," she answered gaily. "And what about the local girl who made good—the Story of Stella the Star?"

"Don't be silly. You know I'm not a star," she answered. "I'm slated to understudy several of the top liners in the good roles I sang in Paris. I didn't expect anything else, the first year. But if my contract's renewed—"

"Why, it's sure to be!" Patty exclaimed confidently. "And isn't there a chance that you might come to New Orleans in the spring, when we have our three-day season here?"

"There might be. But I haven't thought that far ahead yet. Of course I've been busy getting settled. I've found the cunningest little penthouse, and an excellent maid."

"Is she fun to have around?" Raoul inquired quizzically. "My new household staff lacks style, but I'm getting a great kick out of it."

"Your new household staff?" "Why, yes. I had to get one to help me run my new house. I bought that place I told you about last spring. It's always nice to know there's a home to come back to."

While he was speaking, the rubicund waiter brought in an omelette souffle, delicately browned and encircled with the words, "Hail to you, Pat and Drew," executed in snowy meringue. It was put down in front of Patty for her to admire, and afterward it was served and eaten to the accompaniment of running chatter about wedding plans. It was understood, wasn't it, that the rehearsal was to be the next evening at nine? They were all to come to supper at the raised cottage beforehand. Very informal. Not a feast like this. It had been wonderful. She didn't know how to half express her thanks for such a lovely party. But she was afraid she would have to tear herself away from it now.

She was gone, with Drew's arm around her shoulder, confident, joyous, composed. Raoul was bending over Clarinda, saying something almost inaudible to her. But it sounded as if they were making arrangements to go dancing somewhere, after the wedding rehearsal—"It won't last long. Why, that's just the edge of the evening." "All right, let's ask Amelina and Richard to come along, too."

"The party seems to be over, Stella. Shall I take you home?" It was Gail who spoke. The party was indeed over. And Gail was taking her home.

STRANGE BUT TRUE

(Continued from page 3) clover, horse chestnuts, oats, Indian corn, barley, beans, peas and buckwheat, took the place of flour many times; roasted barley and oats, roasted acorns and beechnuts were used in place of coffee. Towards the close of the war, Germany was using carrots and yellow turnips as a substitute for coffee, while the blossom of the linden tree mixed with beechbuds was found to make a beverage that was "par excellent." Roasted peas and oats, a substitute for cocoa.

Some people describe certain blossoms as being black. Don't believe it! The Department of Agriculture says there are no flowers that have absolutely black blossoms. Some pansies and scabiosa are almost black, but not actually black. Careful observation will show they are very dark.

In Southern, or South Carolina, there are 1,000,000 Negroes against 900,000 whites, which is the largest negro population of any state in the Union. Next comes Mississippi with 953,719 Negroes and 820,000 whites.

Eggs take longer to boil in high altitudes. For example, it's possible to boil an egg hard at the top of Pike's Peak, Colorado, and scientists tell us that water would not boil twenty miles above sea level. Water boils at 212 degrees F., at sea level, but on Pike's Peak it boils at about 180 degrees F.

Only seven persons in a million are struck by lightning and the best conductor of electricity is silver. When you see your electric lights flicker, don't get jittery and imagine they are about to go out. The flickering is caused by variation in the speed of the generators, or it may be caused by a ground somewhere in the line.

Progressive Conservative Platform

1. AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES

The Progressive Conservative Party will inaugurate a Special Fund of $1,000,000 to be administered by a Commission under the Ministry of Agriculture, with assistance of the employees and field representatives of the Departments of Agriculture and Fisheries for the purpose of advancing Loans to Farmers and Fishermen and those desirous of becoming Farmers and Fishermen, on long terms of Credit and at a low rate of interest for the following purposes:

- (a) for the purchase of farm lands
- (b) for the purchase of live stock, either pure bred or good grade
- (c) for the purchase of essential farming equipment
- (d) for the purchase of boats and fishing equipment by fishermen
- (e) for the purchase of fish buildings and construction of freezers, storage buildings and a fish meal plant. No down payment shall be necessary, and the sum allotted for the inauguration of this plan shall be $1,000,000.00
- (b) Continuation of and improvement upon the present Agricultural and Fishery activities in all established branches.

2. EDUCATION

Adequate increase in Teachers' salaries with special attention being given to those of experience and academic qualifications.

Free School Books for all pupils up to and including Grade VI in all Public Schools.

3. RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Rural Electrification will be expedited by full co-operation with the distributors of power, and by granting financial assistance where conditions require.

4. ROADS AND HIGHWAYS

- (a) the inauguration of a policy of extension and maintenance of permanent Highways, with equal and fair distribution for each County
- (b) a regular patrol system on all sections of Roads at all seasons.
- (c) a further consideration of the Trans Canada Highway Contract so that its location and manner of building will be in conformity with our needs and economy. Every opportunity will be given for free and open discussion and there will be no ruthless interference with rights and privileges enjoyed for years.

5. DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CLAIMS

The Progressive Conservative Party, having always had faith in our special claims against the Dominion and having a successful record in the past in the enforcement of these claims, as evidenced by the findings of 1912, 1926, 1934, exceeding seven and one half million dollars, which findings the Liberal Party has failed to enforce, and the financial arrangements with the Federal Government being inadequate and unjust to this Province, we shall demand an Agreement which will recognize our special claims and produce for the Province revenue sufficient to meet its fiscal need.

6. ELECTION ACT REFORM

Reform and revision of the Election Act to the effect that every voter shall have a General Franchise in conformity with the principles of the Dominion Election Act. Property qualifications will be dispensed with. Nomination deposits will be reduced to $50.00.
