

October Days.

When clear October days Pour out the wine on the still joyous earth;
The sun, with tempered splendor, shades his rays.
The late birds fill the woods with notes of mirth,
The pines are chanting low, Molian strains That charm the listening plains.
The leaves, all golden-hued, Come falling, falling, where the west wind sighs;
Not yet, the crimson treasures of the wood, Strown by the north wind, charm the children's eyes,
For on the banks where May flowers lately grew,
Blooms love, the harebell blue.
There blue the river flows,
By painted trees on banks of mossy green,
And, saintly still, on yon fair hill repose Dear forms of those who bless the land unseen.
Yet wear the sacred semblance where they dwell
Of what we loved so well.

Position of Women in Ancient Germany.

The ancient Germans—famous for their almost ferocious love of liberty—not only respected, they even revered woman, above all the other nations of their time. Tacitus, in his celebrated Germania, makes a very high comment on this peculiarity, and on the German character in general. This deserves the more credit as it refers to a hostile nation.
He says that the Germans ascribe to women something holy and prophetic (sanctum aliquid et providum), that they consult women on all questions of peace and warfare, and follow their advice. According to him, women held not only the place of companion to her husband—she even held the dignity of priestess and prophetess, of whom Veluda was the most celebrated. The art of healing and dressing the wounds of the warriors was practised by the women of ancient Germany, a fact which also holds good of other nations of antiquity. It is only in modern times that their right and capacity for this art has come to be questioned.
In the feudal ages this reverence for woman was carried over the world-renowned "MinneDienst" a curious immi-tation of the "courtship" of the trouba-dours. But not only the fine and noble ladies in their castles enjoyed this relative superior position, the very nuns in their cloister combined the grace of women with the learning of men, and even rivalled them in contesting for the laurels of the poet. Roswitha, "the nun of Gandersheim," was the most renowned of them. She lived in the tenth century, and although her dramas are composed in Latin, she is termed the great German authoress, and, as some would say satirically, the first German "blue-stocking."

There were a great many more learned women in Germany during the time of the Renaissance. Many noble women and patricians were conversant with the Latin and Greek languages and literatures, as was the case in other countries.
A celebrated Italian lady, the honorable Fulvia Olympia Morata, who fled from her country on account of her Protestant tenets, was installed as professor at the University of Heidelberg, where her grave is shown to the tourist up to the present day.
Another noble lady, Argula von Grumbach, carried on with Luther a lively correspondence on religious matters; and the great reformer himself did homage to womanhood in the very selection of his wife, the gentle and virtuous Katharina von Bora.

Here is the record of Bridget Bendish, the granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell of England. We are told she bore a wonderful resemblance to the protector, physically and morally; her energy was immense; she would work for days together without sleeping; had uncommon conversational powers; was liable to periodic attacks of religion ecstasy; and managed her salt works at South-town, in Norfolk, with great exactness.
By her open-handed benevolence, she was popular with the poor. She could never bear to hear adverse criticism upon the life or acts of her grandfather, and one day when travelling in a stage coach, a tory squire so committed himself not knowing in whose presence he was. She jumped out at the next stopping-place, and snatched a sword from her fellow passenger, challenged the royalist to a duel. We are not told further of this affair, it is safe to conjecture that this tory squire had no further doubts whether a woman would fight or not.

It is a fact worth knowing that Mrs. Sophia Potter's Bone Rheumatic Liniment cannot be excelled for removing pain and soreness.
It is no worthless trash, as some may suppose, simply because they have been imposed upon by others but is positively the "King of Pain." Sore throat cannot stand before its power.
All we ask is a trial that you may be convinced of the truth of our statement. Our experience is that one bottle tried also sells many more.
See circular for particulars
