to the front of all competitors, in CLOTHING, HATS, &c.

He does not advertize to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do advertize to sell at cost.

He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.

He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.

He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement

Ethel DeWolfe

—OR—
SHADOWS AND SUNSHINE.
BY S. M. BENT.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

It was the first day of May, bright, beautiful and cloudless, and the perfume of opening roses and jessamine, borne on the softest zephyrs of spring, pleasantly greeted the senses. Washington, arousing from the gloom and mourning that had hung over it since Lincoln's death, had resumed its holiday appearance, and was gay with thousands of soldiers who had come in from distant fields previous to disbanding, and who were sauntering to and fro in the broad streets of the capital they had saved, and revisiting scenes and faces that had grown familiar to them during the earlier days of the war. A number of officers had made their way to the art gallery to while away the afternoon hours. One of a brilliant group was Major Chandley, who, as he passed through the door of the principal salon, naturally turned his eyes towards the centre of the wall, where hung his painting, "Inglewood." It was a picture of the home of Ethel DeWolfe, in all its wealth of flowers and shrubbery, and sitting enthroned amid the blossoming roses was his heart's queen, his beautiful Ethel, while merry bright-robed fairies brought her their gifts of roses, and far away in the distant sky, casting a pathway of silver light over the quivering waters of the broad river, shone the crescent moon, growing towards the full, and just inclining to the west, almost touching the jagged edge of a deep, dense, ominous cloud that was creeping across the heavens, soon to throw its darkness over the radiant orb of evening and hide the perfect floral scene with the shadowing blackness of night. As Paul glanced towards the picture, he saw, as he supposed from her garb, a Sister of Charity move up to examine it. At the same moment he espied, at the further side of the room, Lionel Warner, intent upon some works of art. He drew a quick breath, set his teeth, and hastened his steps to meet him, when a shriek—"Paul! Paul! where is Paul?"— rang through the room, and he saw the supposed nun sink fainting to the floor.
In a moment he was holding her in his arms, and calling for water. As he drew back the close hood from her brow, he gazed in dazed surprise on the fair pale face before him, and, recalling the tones of a voice long unheard by him, he recognized his loved one, changed, like himself, by many months of service in field and tent, she fairer and more womanly grown, he brown and stern.

"Heavenly Father! I thank thee! it is Ethel, my beloved! Ethel, my darling, awaken and speak to me; it is your lover who is with you again," exclaimed he, passionately, as he kissed her pale lips, bathed her colorless face, and chafed her cold hands.

"I think, Major Chandley, that I have the best right to this task, and if you will allow me, I will relieve you of your charge," spoke a measured, insinuating voice, and looking up, Paul saw Lionel Warner preparing to take Ethel from his arms, while her father, who had also appeared on the scene, looked on in dumb astonishment, almost powerless to move.

"Stand back!" said Paul, "this is no place for pottrons and vipers like you.
Move back, I say, and don't dare lay your polluting hands on the angel you have too long persecuted. You have a man to deal with now, not a helpless girl to torture, so beware."

"Mr. DeWolfe, who has the best right to Ethel?" asked Warner fiercely, determined to put on a bold air, though he knew that she was lost to him forever.

"I don't know, I'm sure," slowly replied Mr. DeWolfe, completely bewildered by the unexpected turn of events and the unlooked for meeting in which he had so suddenly found himself.

"This is not the time, coward, to argue any question with you," said Paul, continuing his efforts to restore the fair girl to consciousness.

The old surgeon who had befriended her happened to drop in, and being told the cause of the wondering crowd, he forced his way through it, and applying restoratives, Ethel was soon conscious again, and lying in Paul's protecting arms, while Lionel stood scowling by.

"Paul, Paul, am I waking, or is it only in a dream that I see your face? Speak, Paul, and tell me I am not in a trance?"
"It is I, darling Ethel; I have found you at last, and I shall not let you go again.
Are you not mine forever, dearest?" whispered he.

Yes, Paul, forever and forever. I have prayed for many a long day that we should meet again, for I could not believe you dead when they told me so. Keep me close in your arms, Paul, keep me always with you."

"Nothing but death shall part us now, my own."
"Have you no word of greeting for your father, Ethel, my dear child?" said Mr.
DeWolfe, rousing at last from his bewilderment, and advancing to embrace his long lost daughter.

"Father, my dearest father, are you here too? Heaven is showering down blessings on me to-day. Have you still a welcome for me? Do you forgive your erring child her unfaithfulness? You know you promised me that you would never judge me harshly."
"There is nothing to forgive, Ethel, dear, for the fault was mine, and you did right; let the past be forgotten, we will not speak of it in this happy hour, we will not speak of it again," and the warmth of his greeting showed that the words were meant. It was an hour of pure joy, of gratitude to God for the loving reunion of long sundered hearts.

No Bait in Newfoundland.

The schooner Thomas J. Bayard, which arrived at Gloucester on the 26th from the Banks; reports calling at Boone Bay, on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, where the captain was ordered off and prohibited from buying bait. The vessel brings a small trip of halibut owing to the difficulties he had in procuring bait. This is one instance where a broken voyage is made by the captain being harassed by government officials. While at Boone Bay the following note was served on Captain McDonald, which he complied with:—

BOONE BAY, N. F., July 12th, 1886.

Sir.—I am instructed to give you notice that the presence of your vessel in this port is in violation of the articles of the international convention of 1818, between Great Britain and the United States, in relation to fishery rights on the coast of Newfoundland, and of the laws in force in this country for the enforcement of the article of the convention, and the purchase of bait or ice or other transaction in connection with fishery operations within the three-mile limit of the coast of this colony will be in further violation of the terms of said convention.

N. N. YAYLOR, Officer of Customs.

Lost in the Atlantic.

AN AGED MILLIONAIRE-GENERAL MEETS A SAD END.

Gen. John H. Van Allan, an aged millionaire, of Newport, was lost overboard from the Cunard steamship Umbria, a few days ago. Gen. Van Allan boarded the steamer at Queenstown with his brother-in-law, Mayor Robert M. Grinnell, who had come from London to take him home.
Gen. Van Allan, who was seventy-one years old, had gone to England in May to take two little children of his son, James J.
Van Allan, of Newport, to a private school of a clergyman at Southampton. This mission was entrusted to the old general at his own request, and because he was devotedly attached to the little ones. He had been suffering for a fortnight before he started for England from dysentery, and he grew so much worse abroad that his return journey was hastened. His mind began to be affected by his illness. Gen. Van Allan and Mr. Grinnell occupied Capt. Mc-Mickie's cabin. Grinnell, weary with long watching, had fallen asleep about 2 o'clock last Thursday morning on the captain's sofa. Gen. Van Allan got up, took his walking stick, and leaving the cabin noiselessly, went out on the promenade deck, and was not seen again. It is not definitely known whether he fell overboard in a sudden lurch of the vessel, or whether he committed suicide.

A Wonderful Discovery.

Dr. Giovanni Succi has discovered a liquor in Africa which dispenses with the ordinary requirements of man in the way of food and drink. He drank several glasses of it, and then having fasted for ten days, ran four miles in forty-seven minutes. Probably twenty glasses would have brought his record down to 23 1/2 minutes.

Should he be fortunate enough to discover another liquid that obviates the necessity of clothing—and judging by the accounts of travellers the natives of Africa must know of some such fluid—the coming man will be set up in life if he has enough money to buy a few casks of Dr. Succi's mixture. But this is a terrible blow to the agricultural interest. It will matter little whether the crops are good or bad, whether a farm raises two or twenty bushels to the acre, whether the cowboys raise cattle or Cain, while the prescriptions of the medical men for the cure of dyspepsia and the evils arising from unwholesome food will be simply drugs upon the market. The craft of the silversmiths will be as much in danger as in the time of St. Paul, and the crochery men will be broken as completely as their own wares in the hands of the household cat. Nobody will want anything except Dr. Succi's new discovery. The time of mankind will be divided between drinking this new fluid, fasting ten days, and running four miles in forty-seven minutes.
It can't affect the newspapers, however; on the contrary, people will have more time to read them and more money to subscribe for them.

Expense No Object.

It was over at one of the picnic parks, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The leader of the band arrived and went to survey the place and the music. He came with two or three of his musicians to the piano. They got their instruments out and were tuning them when the proprietor came along. Just as he came up to them the leader was sounding a note on the piano.
"Too low," he said to the cornet, "too low."
"What's that," said the proprietor.
"The piano—too low—that's all." "Here Jake," yelled the proprietor to the carpenter across the place. "Here, Jake, this piano wants raising. Just tell him how high you want it. That's what he is paid for. He'll raise it three feet if you need it. I don't want no slouchin' in this music."

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites

AS A REMEDY FOR PULMONARY AFFECTIONS AND SCROFULOUS DISEASES.
Dr. Ira M. Lang—a prominent physician in New York, says, "I am greatly pleased with your Emulsion. I have found it very serviceable in above diseases, and it is easily administered on account of its palatable-ness."
