DROPPED ON SUGAR.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT CURES COLDS CROUP COUGH COLIC CRAMPS

All who use it are amazed at its wonderful power and are loud in its praise ever after. For internal as much as External Use. Originated in 1810 by an old Family Physician. Be not afraid to trust what time has endorsed. At all Druggists. I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass.

Every Mother should have it in the house for the many common ailments which will occur in every family as long as life has woes. Dropped on sugar suffering children love it. Do not forget the very important and useful fact, that Johnson's Anodyne Liniment cures every form of inflammation, Internal or External. It is a fact, proven by the investigations of medical science, that the real danger from disease is caused by inflammation: cure the inflammation and you conquer the disease.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT

Could a remedy have existed for over eighty years except for the fact that it does possess extraordinary merit for very many Family Ills? There is not a medicine in use today which has the confidence of the public to so great an extent as his wonderful Anodyne. It has stood upon its own intrinsic merit, while generation after generation have used it with entire satisfaction, and handed down to their children a knowledge of its worth, as a Universal Household Remedy, from infancy to good old age.

Our Book "Treatment for Diseases" Mailed Free. Doctor's Signature and Directions on every bottle. Be not afraid to trust what time has endorsed. At all Druggists. I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass.

Cod-liver oil suggests consumption, which is almost unfortunate.

Its best use is before you fear consumption; when you begin to get thin, weak, run down; then is the prudent time to begin to take care, and the best way to take care is to supply the system with needed fat and strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, will bring back plumpness to those who have lost it, and make strength where raw cod-liver oil would be a burden.

A substitute only imitates the original.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." Civil Service Gazette

TWO SINNERS.

BY HELEN B. MATHERS.

PART I.—CHAPTER I.

The door closed sharply, but the echo, the manner of his words remained behind him, and with a sudden wild gesture of astonished joy, "Aw, but he's jealous," she said in awe-struck tones; then snatched up the children in a sudden exuberance of joy and gave herself up to a feast of love with them that only ceased when they were abed and asleep. She came slowly down the stairway, binding up her disordered hair as she came; then, in the middle of the room, suddenly threw out her grand arms with a gesture of profoundest content, gazing around her as if the humble room were a palace and its contents beautiful beyond compare. A shepherd and shepherdess in delft stood on the chimney shelf, one of Steve's "fairings" during courtship, and Tamminy picked them both up and kissed them heartily, then went around the place touching this and that homely article of everyday use, with keenest pleasure, for every pot and pipkin formed a link in the chain that bound her to her old life, once so irksome, but now dear and beautiful in her eyes. No matter under what conditions, this was home, and but a few hours ago she was an outcast under yonder sky, hungering for her children, and with only the mercy of one man to come between her and hell. And he had not passed her by. Christ himself had not shown a more divine forgiveness than did this poor fisherman upon whom Tamminy in her awful despair, or, as others said, in her hardihood, had cried out, and not in vain, for he had come to her instantly, and by walking beside her through the village mutely made her quarrel with the world around.

And now he had gone out to face gibe and sneer, and Steve's pride had always been his besetting sin, and blows would be struck and ill-blood gotten between him and his fellows, but the women's tongues he could not silence. Cassandry's least of all.

Well, they were even now, thought Tamminy, and laughed harshly. That was the fatal mistake a woman made when she revenged herself on a man, she only brought herself down to his level and that of the other woman, whereas she on the right side of the hedge may suffer indeed, but with such suffering as winnows her soul pure.

And then Tamminy smiled.

"Aw, but he's jealous," she said in a tone of huge content, then turned to go at her cleaning-up as if she loved it, and having made all as neat as a new pin and put Steve's bread and cheese out against his return, she disappeared into the little lean-to that he had built against the house, and soon a great commotion was to be heard inside, and dust flew through the keyhole and spread itself over the sanded floor.

For all the odds and ends of a fisherman had gone into that rubbish shop, and now they had to be turned out or decently hidden. Tamminy was almost as black as a coal when at last she emerged, and, having washed off some of the dirt, disappeared up the stairway, returning with first one thing, then another, a mattress being one of the most important items, and when this was disposed of, and fair white sheets and blankets added, Tamminy stood back to look at her handiwork, then stopped and pressed her lips to the pillow where Steve's head was to lie.

"Aw, but I'll make it up to 'ee, my lad," she said with a sob, then resumed her work, and when all was done and comfort reigned she took one last journey, and came back dimpling with a looking-glass that she propped up against the wall, and which she further embellished by a faded daguerrotype representing herself at sixteen.

"He can thraw it away if he've got a mind to," she said, chuckling like a mischevious child at sight of its own work, and it was at this moment that Cassandry, prowling round, or attracted by a light shining through a chink in the boards, peeped in.

"Aw, but she've got no shame!" said Cassandry as Tamminy, carrying a light in her hand, disappeared into the cottage.

Half an hour afterwards Steve came in head foremost and flung himself silent and bleeding into a chair.

"M'appen they'll let her alone now," he muttered, fiercely, as he glanced round the cottage, so disturbed yesterday, now restored to its usual purity, with his supper set, his pipe and 'baccy beside it, and the one comfortable chair the place afforded drawn close up to the table. But the hurt in the man's soul was too deep yet to be soothed by bodily comfort, and for a long while he sat with head buried in his hands, living over again in agony all the events of the past few weeks. It was dark night now, and was not some unquiet step moving near at hand, something that held one hand to a heart nerve that throbbed and throbbed in pain? Presently he took the light and threw open the door of the lean-to, starting back at sight of the neat bed chamber revealed.

"Eh, but she've stripped herself that I may lie soft," he muttered, and the woman who watched from without saw his wandering glance fall on the faded daguerrotype, that after a moment's hesitation he picked up and looked at furtively, as one ashamed. "'Tis an innocent face," he said aloud. "God's curse on him who spoiled it, and on him as let her be led into temptation," he added, turning about with the picture still in his hand. Not a sound came from overhead. Shading the light with his hand, he climbed the stairs, treading on tiptoe and moving like a thief in the night.

The stripped bed looked naked in the distance. On the floor, with her head pillowed on the breasts of her children as they slept on their low couch beside her and one arm thrown about them, Tamminy slept. The woman out in the garden for all the warm summer night, shivered as she waited in her jealous agony, watching with sickening impatience for the gleam of the returning candle.

At last it came. Steve reappeared in the doorway and began to throw his clothes off for the night, but in the midst kneeled down and prayed.

"God!" he said audibly; "forgive her. O God! do thou forgive me, a sinner."

Cassandry stole away. She was far enough from the heart and lips of Steve that night. Yet when he prayed for himself he should have prayed for her.

CHAPTER II.

The little fishing village of Yale, innocent of sewerage save what ran down the stream on one side of its long, unsavory street, actually boasted a church, to which the fishing population went, clean for once, but still redolent of that smell of fish that in Yale was never entirely forgotten.

The R. A.'s and lesser painter folk, who made the place headquarters at some period or other of their existences, thought nothing of the smell, only they objected to living on the origin of it, and on days when no butcher's meat was obtainable, bid fair to die from [illegible] surfeit of crabs, but invariably recovered.

Church then being an institution, on the especial Sunday following Tamminy's elopement and return the congregation was well seated and the advent of parson momentarily expected, when a ripple of excitement, beginning just inside the church door, spread with extraordinary rapidity to the very altar steps, as Dr. Trevennick looked down the aisle to discover the cause of it.

The cause was not far to seek, with hundreds of angry eyes to guide him, and there on a bench reserved mainly for casuals, sat Tamminy, with her two young children and Steve, his face stern and controlled, beside her. Dr. Trevennick saw the whole thing in a flash—more, he grasped it as another might not have done, for he knew Steve and Tamminy both, their characters making a real refreshment to him in his labors about the place. Both were so noble, so apart from the rest of the fisher folk, and both, alas! had fallen, the one in secret, the other in sight of God and man, and they had come here humbly, as sinners, to sit beyond the pale of the righteous and endure the stare of the scornful, because in their simple hearts they must worship even though they sinned. Dr. Trevennick did not preach the sermon that day he had previously prepared. Instead he took that text, "Let him who is without sin amongst you cast the first stone," and without allusion to the woman dragged before Christ, he preached in a way that made old sins wriggle in men's minds, old faults show naked in virtuous women's eyes, and when he had done there was scarce a man or woman there who felt equal to turning the glances on Tamminy they had been choke full of when service began.

Once Tamminy lifted up her eyes and met Cassandry's, full. It was an eloquent look, saying much, and before that glance the woman, respectable in the eyes of the world seemed to shrink up and change place with the wrongdoer, and Martha, whom little escaped, chuckled in her heart.

"Maybe 'twill be your turn next," she said to herself as she joined the group gathered in the churchyard to discuss "parson's sermon," a group composed mainly of women, as Steve's fist had taught silence to many a wagging tongue during the past few days.

"Aw," said Cassandry, "he've took her back sure enough, an' he stands by her when she brazens it out at worship, for he be a man"—her voice swelled out in a note of curiously mingled admiration and personal pride—"but he don't love her no more—an' she bides upstairs with the children, an' he makes shifts in the lean-to by nights."

"An' how might 'ee be knowin' that, less 'ee'd sneaked round to see?" inquired Martha with her nawtiest air.

AN ALARMING INCREASE.

The Prevalence of Female Complaints Found to Result Largely From the Kidneys

SAGINAW, Mich., July 13.—Doctors are beginning to turn their attention more exclusively to the causes for the great increase of what is known as female complaints during the past ten years and to remedies for the same. Many cases have been investigated, and among others that of Mrs. Reany, of Ashland, Wis., who was cured of this form of trouble by the use of a kidney medicine known as Dodd's Kidney Pills, which originated in Canada, but has now become widely known and used throughout the western States. This and other similar cases go to show that the troubles are largely due to the kidneys and that the above mentioned remedy is likely to have a great effect in lessening the number of victims to this form of complaint.

A miniature of the young Duchess of Marlborough has recently been painted by Miss Kussner. The Duke has ordered two copies of the portrait, the total cost being some £300.

"The Railroad Kidney"

Railroad employes, bicyclists, teamsters and other men who are subjected to much jolting, are often troubled with a pain across the small of the back. This indicates the "Railroad Kidney," an insidious precursor of serious illness. On the slightest symptoms of backache take one Chase's Kidney Liver Pill—one is a dose—and thus obtain instant relief. For all kidney troubles they have no equal. 25c. per box.

It is computed by a statistician of the curious that Queen Victoria's hand, which is said to be a handsome one, has signed more important state papers and been kissed by more important men than the hand of any other Queen that ever lived.

A Good Deal in a Few Words.

"I paid a Toronto specialist on catarrh a large sum of money, but I got no benefit. I tried them all, but finally, almost in despair, and assuredly without any faith, I tried Chase's Catarrh Cure. It is all that it is recommended, which is saying a good deal in a few words." Joel Rogers, clerk, Division Court, Bolton. Improved blower in each 25c. box.

If one could have his way during life, one wouldn't care much if his will were tested after his death.

It was Princess Maud, who, when but a little girl, gratified her early democratic ambitions by lagging behind her nurse in Hyde Park to buy an orange and sit down upon the grass to suck it "like other little girls."

Money no Object.

The amount of money sufferers from catarrh will spend in attempting to cure that foul and disagreeable disease is almost incredible. J. W. Jennings, of Gilford, Ont., says: "I spent between $200 and $300 consulting doctors; I tried all the 'treatments' without benefit. One box of Chase's Catrrh Cure did me more good than all the remedies. A 25c. box cured me." Don't waste money. Chase's Cure, with improved blower, 25c. It cures.

A traveller visiting Naples recently had his attention called to a placard posted on the door of a little shop in the Via Toledo informing the public that "the title of duke is offered for sale; inquire within."

Wore Greased Gloves Seven Years

John Siron, mason, Aultsville, Ont., had salt rheum so severe that for seven years he wore greased gloves. He writes: "I used a quarter of a box of Chase's Ointment. It cured me. No trace of salt rheum now." Chase's Ointment cures every irritant disease of the skin, allays itching instantly, and is a sterling remedy for piles. Avoid imitations. 60c. per box.

It was Mr. Beecher who said that the man who can learn to love tobacco can learn to love anything under heaven. Ladies with tobacco loving husbands should remember this and live in hope.

That Pale Face

For nervous prostration and anæmia there is no medicine that will so promptly and infallibly restore vigor and strength as Scott's Emulsion.

It is said that the bicycling princess who is to be married next week is almost as much interested in her new bicycle suit as to her wedding gown itself.

A Cape Town despatch to the London Daily News says that the select committee on the Jameson raid into the Transvaal has concluded its labors. It has learned little that is new. Its report will show that Cecil Rhodes and Alfred Belt, the Directors of the South African Company, who were implicated in the raid, have refunded to the company all of the sums drawn by the Johannesburg reformers.

THREE FEMALE DICK TURPINS.

Women Robbers Alarm a District by Their Daring Operations.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 11.—Residents of Warrior Run and Sugar Notch, near here, have been alarmed during the last three weeks by a series of daring "hold ups," all at night, committed by three highway robbers, who, in some cases, have obtained considerable booty.

Henry Fisher, who lives some little distance from Warrior Run, was on his way home, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, when he was stopped in a dark place in the road by three robbers and ordered to give up his money and valuables. Not disposed to do so without an effort to escape, he started to run, but was knocked down.

He grappled with one of his assailants and was surprised to find that the robber was clad in skirts and had long hair, which became loosened in the struggle. Two femine shrieks also convinced him that the footpads were women. The struggle was brief, for the two others coming to the assistance of their comrade again felled Fisher to the ground, took his watch, some change and his pocketbook and ran away.

Fisher gave the alarm, but by the time other men had reached the spot there was no sign of the daring women. The police have no clew to the identity of the robbers.
