ELLEN'S DIARY

Ellen Notes History Made In Glenn's Space Journey

Today, hailed as one of the greatest events in the history of our neighbours to the South, the United States, Col. John Glen circled the earth three times, making the span of a few hours, the first man-orbital flight in what is spoken of as "a breakthrough" to more extensive space exploration, in the months and years ahead.

"I'd say scientists shouldn't be meddling with the moon or Venus or Saturn or what-have-you, off there in space. Suppose they are inhabited, they just might stir up a hornet's nest" an old-timer of farmer, who has seen many a change, and improvement, and miracle wrought, in the last half-century of his living, observed through a cloud of pipe-smoke the other day, when we chatted of the space-flight then postponed. "Yes, I say if they're quiet away off there, let them be!"

And yet if none had been curious in the ages how small our world would have been. What delights of lands would have remained undiscovered, what lovelinesses unknown.

Down in Florida, where today's launching of the spaceship was effected, there was a bright, clear sky, there would be too in that mostly summerland, it came to mind, sparkling lakes and seas, flowerings in profusion, orchards bearing fruits, and gay carolling birdsong.

At Alderlea, the robins' nests, held in the stack limbs of the white birch, were then being rethatched by the snowfall which blew along yard and field.

"This is going to be a stormy day, Ellen" James had offered, he being first to a window this morning. "It's snowing now. Roads will fill. We'll do well if we get the stock tended today, here, and at the other barns." Now the drifts of day rest. Presently the moon will rise above the winterwhite world. Nor is the night dark now. Only dim. And in the dimness how pretty the valley is from a window, the trees and woodlands velvet - dark against the fields' quiet white.

Mack, on holiday from school, found his day at home an extremely busy one, from the time he drew the surplus milk from the nanny after the wee goat had nursed this morning, until a few minutes ago, when the lights in the stable-windows suddenly vanished, denoting that at length the farmers' day was at an end.

And how did we like the day? Personally, if all is well with the family and those about, we can find no fault with the weatherman for sending the odd stormy day. We enjoy the coziness indoors, the shelter of the home to which the household gathers from the inclemency without. It provides an opportune time too, to sew or knit or mend— to read, or to listen in to some radio program; or maybe just to idle the minutes away, like the black cat drowsing on his cushion, while wind-blown snow edges the panes.

"Did the forecast say we'd get sunshine tomorrow, Ellen?" James asks rising from the old armchair. "Then, let's get to bed" he says. "You know after the storm, we must be up early to get things straightened away in the morning."

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.

MARY HAWORTH

Widow Involves Herself With Selfish Bachelor

Dear Mary Haworth: I will state the facts briefly and your answer should help not only me but other women who've been in my situation and played the fool.

I am a widow, 47, attractive, dress beautifully, have a beautiful home (all paid for) and a new car. I hold an executive job that pays me around ten thousand dollars a year.

My husband, the kindest most wonderful man, who loved and adored me, left me an estate of close to half a million dollars. I belong to a country club and many women's organizations.

I fell deeply in love with a bachelor near my age and there isn't anything I wouldn't do for him. He is an executive, lives in a lovely apartment and we spend weekends together, or an evening a week — as suits his convenience.

We are having an affair, something I never did before and it is beginning to worry me and affect my health and looks. He travels a lot, but never thinks to call me when out of town. He sings my praises but I am beginning to think he is simply using me. He never lets anything interfere with his plans and suits himself at the last minute, giving me no chance to plan ahead.

I've been asked to dinner by other men and have refused. (I'm not the type to hurt anyone). He doesn't go out with other women, so far as I know, and I don't see why he couldn't spend more time with me. I want to marry him.

What am I to do? I don't want a broken heart. How deeply must one love a man, to let him know you wouldn't interfere with any of his plans? What are my chances? (He too reads your column).— W.C.

Dear W.C.: Your luckless involvement with the corrupt bachelor is not the mainspring of your present dismay. Rather it is but symptomatic of a more basic disorder that cries for correction.

The ingrained handicap that is spoiling your widowhood is your habit of self-centeredness, of almost infantile proportions.

Because of this handicap you are consistently misusing your gifts of personality, failing to function as a real woman, in the woman's prime role as comforter, consoler and helper of the needy—the only role that can give a woman the peace of personal fulfillment, as she matures.

You are lavishly blessed with material goods, but overpowered (or rendered joyless and blighted in feeling) by an excess of lonely leisure and empty idleness of mind and spirit, known to many wealthy persons who live solely for themselves—concerned only with favoring their own welfare.

Figuratively speaking, you are stranded in futility, as a wanderer in the desert might be lost in wastelands. Against this background, your infatuation for the bachelor emerges as a delusion. As a desert mirage seems to the traveler to be an oasis, so the bachelor seems, to you, to promise love and sanctuary—even though you know he doesn't.

The traveler, in leaving the desert, leaves the mirage behind. And you, in resolutely outgrowing self-centeredness, will automatically go free of this sordid attachment that misleads you.

As of now, you may think you are giving yourself with love to the bachelor. But in fact you are courting his worship of yourself; trying, by pagan unscrupulous wiles, to enslave him sexually. Instinctively he senses that and reacts with comparable selfishness— playing the game exploitatively.

What to do? Come out of the wastelands. Address yourself, heart and soul, to good works. Help the downtrodden in your town; become a Salvation Army booster; go to church; get on the beam of true love: which is God's love of humanity, expressed through people who have surrendered their lives to Him. M.H.
