THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"Saw whom?—follow whom?" said Minna, hoping to gain some information on each subject of her fears and her anxiety.

"The corpse-lights which danced at the heaven," replied Halero; "they bode no good, I promise you—you wot well what the old rhyme says—

'Where corpse-light
Dances bright,
Be it day or night,
Be it light or dark,
There shall corpse lie stiff and stark.'

I went half as far as the haven to look after them, but they have vanished. I think I saw a boat put off, however—some one bound for the Haaf, I suppose.—I would've had good news of this fishing—there was Norma left as in anger,—and then these corpse-lights!—Well, God help the while! I am an old man, and can but wish that all were well over.—But how now, my pretty Minna? tears in your eyes!—And, now that I see you in the fair moonlight, barefooted, too, by Saint Magnus!—Were there no stockings of Zetland wool soft enough for these pretty feet and ankles, that glance so white in the moonbeam?—What, silent!—angry, perhaps? he added, in a more serious tone, "at my nonsense? For shame, silly maiden!—Remember I am old enough to be your father, and have always loved you as my child."

"I am not angry," said Minna, constraining herself to speak—"but heard you nothing?—saw you nothing?—They must have passed you."

"They?" said Claud Halero; "what men you say?—is it the corpse-lights?—No, they did not pass by me, but I think they have passed by you, and blighted you with their influence, for you are as pale as a spectre. —Come, come, Minna," he added, opening a side door of the dwelling, "these moonlight walks are fitter for old poets than for young maidens—And so lightly clad as you are! Maiden, you should take care how you give yourself to the breezes of a Zetland night, for they bring more sleet than odors upon their wings.—But, maiden, go in; for, as glorious John says—or, as he does not say—for I cannot remember how his verse chimes—but, as I say myself, in a pretty poem, written when my muse was in her teens,—

Meanful maiden ne'er should rise,
Till the first beam tinge the skies;
Sik-fringed eyelids still should close,
Till the foot has kiss'd the rose;
Maiden's face we should not view,
Mark'd with tiny print on dew,
Till the opening flowerets spread
Carpet meet for beauty's tread—

Stay, what comes next?—let me see.

When the spirit of recitation seized on Claud Halero, he forgot time and place, and might have kept his companions in the cold air for half an hour, giving poetical reasons why she ought to have been in bed. But she interrupted him by the question, earnestly pronounced, yet in a voice which was scarcely articulate, holding Halero, at the same time, with a trembling and convulsive grasp, as if to support herself from falling,—

"Saw you no one in the boat which put to sea but now?"

"Nonsense," replied Halero, "How could I see anyone, when light and distance only enabled me to know that it was a boat, and not a grampus?"

"But there must have been some one in the boat?" repeated Minna, scarce conscious of what she said.

"Certainly," answered the poet; "boats seldom work to windward of their own accord. But come, this is all folly; and as the Queen says, in an old play, which was revived for the stage by rare Will D'Avenant, 'To bed—to bed—to bed!'"

They separated, and Minna's limbs conveyed her with difficulty, through several devious passages, to her own chamber, where she stretched herself cautiously beside her still sleeping sister, with a mind harassed with the most agonizing comprehensions. That she had heard Cleveland, she was positive; the tenor of the songs left her no doubt on that subject. If not equally certain that she had heard young Merton's voice in hot quarrel with her lover, the impression to that effect was strong on her mind. The groan, with which the struggle seemed to terminate—the fearful indication from which it seemed that the conqueror had borne off the lifeless body of his victim—all tended to prove that some fatal event had concluded the contest. And which of the unhappy men had fallen?—which had met a bloody death?—which had achieved a fatal and bloody victory?—These were questions to which the still small voice of interior conviction answered, that her lover Cleveland, from character, temper and habits, was most likely to have been the survivor of the fray. She received from the reflection an involuntary consolation, which she almost detested herself for admitting, when she recollected that it was at once darkened with her lover's guilt, and embittered with the destruction of Brenda's happiness for ever.

"Innocent, unhappy sister!" such were her reflections; "thou art ten times better than I, because so unpretending—so unassuming in thine excellence! How is it possible that I should cease to feel a pang, which is only transferred from my bosom to thine."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Leavened Bread.

SIR,—There was a sermon preached in one of our city churches in June last. The preacher took for his text: "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." He took a glance at the Scriptures, and then he showed that leaven in the Scriptures was used as a figure of wickedness, and cited a number of places, such as the leaven of Herod and the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees, and of the Apostle Paul using it in the same way. There are some of my readers who will recollect his discourse, which was all true and to the point. But he came short in it after all. He forgot to tell his hearers that it was not Scriptural to use leavened bread in the Lord's Supper. I was not a little surprised when I heard that he left it untouched. What his reason could have been it is hard to say. He must have known that they were transgressors in this Divine ordinance, and therefore it was his duty to lay it before them. What was he afraid of?—offending them?—or was he afraid of hurting his own ears?—Was he a transgressor? himself? I cannot say. There was something hindered him, and it was a pity.

Let us ask, what is Leaven? The learned Dr. Adam Clark says, in his notes on the Passover: "Leaven itself is a species of corruption, being produced by fermentation, which in such cases tends to putrefaction. In this very light St. Paul considers the subject in this place. Hence, alluding to the Passover as a type of Christ, he says: 'Purge out, therefore, the old leaven, for Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us. Therefore, let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.'

I have given you the Doctor's definition of Leaven. I would further remark that God himself has used it as a figure of sin and wickedness, and so has our Lord used it in the same sense: "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisee, and of the Sadducee, and of Herod and others," and so has the Holy Spirit, by the mouth of his servant Paul.

Let us now take a glance at the Body of our Lord, and see what you think of it then. You are aware that the Body of our Lord saw no corruption; and yet those persons will take corruption, the figure of sin, to represent the Body of our Lord that saw no corruption. Did ever mortal man make a more wicked blunder? Jesus said: "This is my body, broken for you; do this in remembrance of me." Would any person think that a people calling themselves Christian would dare to take corruption or putrefaction to represent the Immaculate Body of our Lord? What a gross insult upon the Son of God. They do it without the slightest authority from God's Word, or from the early practice of the Church, for leavened bread was not used for a thousand years after our Lord ascended to glory.

These things considered, we may ask those persons what they are going to do? Are you going on in your unscriptural path and meet an offended God, or are you going to reform, confess your sin, and turn to the ways of the Lord, and not deceive the people any longer? It is a fearful thing to meet the Lord in judgment, transgressing his ordinances.

I have made this letter very plain, and my prayer is that you will receive it. I have used strong language, for I knew that nothing else would do, and I hope that the Lord will help you to forsake the evil and choose the good. If you do not reform, I fear that God will send you strong delusion that you may believe a lie; and if this should take place it will be fearful. No greater lie could be penned or spoken than to say that leavened bread was Scriptural or fit for the Lord's Supper.

I must close for this time, leaving it in the hands of Him that worketh all things after the counsel of His own will.

Thanking you, sir, for your space and patience, I remain, yours,
A BAPTIST.
