

Good Morning UPEI ! Possible Campus Web Radio Station

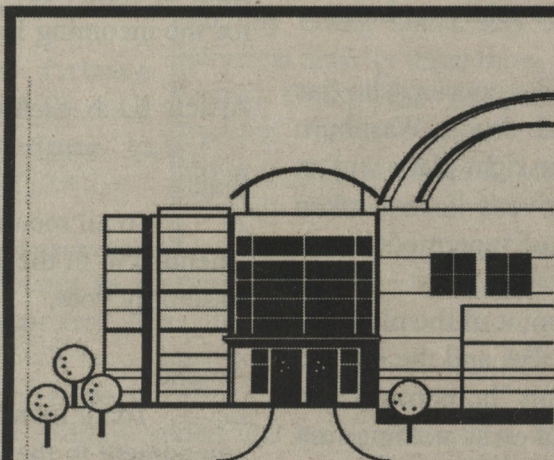

By Jamie McGuigan
Reporter

Perhaps some vets around campus recall the glory days of the old UPEI Campus radio, CIMN. Canned in August, 1999 CIMN stretched across the vast region from AVC to one or two lucky apartments in Brown's Court, had a plethora of operating problems, and cost a heck of a lot of money. Those were the good old days indeed. Fast-forward to present times, where rumors have begun circulating of UPEI once again taking a stab at radio, this time over the web.

A web radio station is only a fraction of the cost of an actual station. "A radio license alone costs thousands of dollars," said UPEISU President Clare Henderson, and that is only the beginning of the expenses. There are also many ongoing operating costs. However, as web radio stations are ested in the web radio station, whether it's to see it get up and running, be a DJ, or just ask questions, Henderson has this advice: "Contact the Student Union, or start a radio society." Basically, get out there and show some interest, because I'm sure everyone is tired of waiting for local stations to put on something to butter your roll with.
