There has always been a sort of good-natured rivalry between the top players in America and the leading lights among our British cousins across the sea. The British will usually concede that when it comes to card play the American experts have an edge. But so far as bidding is concerned, the British claim our methods are inferior to theirs and that, as a result, we do not arrive at the best contracts as often as they do.

UN Should 'Host' Summit Meeting

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (Reuters)—Dag Hammarskjold strongly urged Saturday that the anticipated summit meeting be held within the framework of the United Nations but ruled out the setting up of a UN military or civilian political authority in Berlin. The UN secretary-general noted that when summit talks were being considered last year they were to have been "on the basis of, within, or in intimate connection with the Security Council."

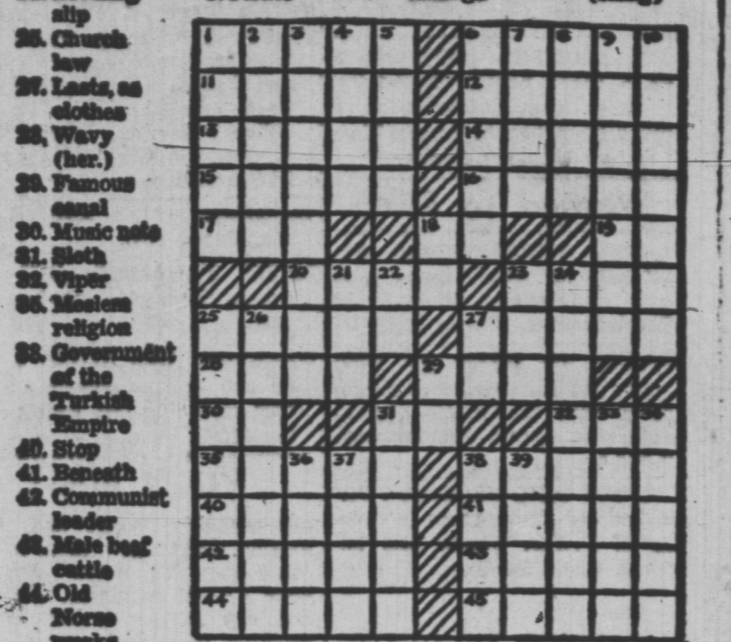

Herter Flies Home Friday

PARIS (Reuters)—Secretary of State Christian Herter flew back to Washington Friday night confident that progress can be made at the Geneva meeting of foreign ministers — if Russia wants it. In a brief statement, the 64-year-old secretary said he was "highly pleased" at the rapid and complete agreement he reached here with the British, French and West German foreign ministers on a common approach to the Geneva conference starting on May 11.
