The Knothole

By Thornton W. Burgess

Pray nothing scorn for being small; The atom can't be seen at all. —Old Mother Nature

To dare or not to dare? Chatterer the Red Squirrel was trying to make up his mind. He was climbing low down on the trunk of a big tree deep in the Green Forest. For some time now, he had been dodging back and forth around the trunk of that tree to escape from Stubwing the Hawk who was trying to catch him. Then Mrs. Stubwing had appeared and it was two to one. Now he had very little hope.

Finally there had been a mixup in the air. Both those fierce birds had swooped at Chatterer from the same side. Each was in the way of the other. Now they were engaged in blaming each other.

This gave Chatterer a chance for a hurried look around. There was a small knothole in it. Was that log hollow, or wasn't it? If it had a hollow big enough for him to get into and he could get there before one of those hawks could catch him, Chatterer would be safe. There was no way of knowing if there was such a hollow except by going over to that log. He really didn't dare do it, nor did he really dare stay dodging around on the trunk of that tree. He was sure if he did sooner or later one of those hawks would catch him.

There was little time in which to decide. It really was now or never. Just as those hawks parted and turned back towards that tree, Chatterer made a frantic jump. He landed just short of the old log. Another jump from the ground put him up on the old log close to that knothole. Perhaps you can guess how Chatterer felt. Was the knothole big enough for him to get through? Was there a hollow big enough to hold him if he did get through the hole? There was no time to waste. Already those hawks had seen him and

Casual Bet Leads To Finding Lost Brother

TORONTO (CP)—A casual bet about the number of persons with the name McGuinness listed in the Toronto telephone directory led Thursday to Mrs. Robert Watson finding her brother, whom she had believed killed in the Second World War.

Here's how it happened: Mrs. Watson got a letter belonging to another family with the same name. She said to her 18-year-old son there must be "quite a few Watsons" in Toronto.

But, she added, "I'll bet there aren't many McGuinnesses." McGuinness was her maiden name.

Her son Ronald disagreed, and checked the phone book. He found 14, and started to read the list to his mother. He read out Jerry McGuinness.

Mrs. Watson interrupted to say that was the name of her brother, believed killed after D-Day.

Ronald phoned the number "just for the heck of it," and in a few minutes Mrs. Watson was talking to her brother. She had not seen him since she was married 28 years ago and moved to Toronto from Montreal.

Said Mr. McGuinness: "I thought it was an insurance agent or a real estate man calling when I first talked to Ronald. They call up all the time. I just couldn't believe I had finally found my sister. I've been looking for her ever since I came back from overseas."

He said he had tried "every way in the world" to get in touch with his sister.

"These last few years I'd given up all hope of ever seeing her again."

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By B. JAY BECKER

The bidding: South West North East 1 NT Pass 2 NT Pass 3 NT

Opening lead—queen of spades. Declarer could not afford to let East's king win the opening lead because of the threatening club situation. Besides, there appeared to be ten tricks begging to be grabbed: four hearts, five diamonds and the ace. So South took the opening lead, led the king of diamonds, and suddenly discovered there were only three diamond tricks where a moment before there had appeared to be five.

South salvaged all he could by taking four heart tricks, then the queen and ace of diamonds. This brought him to eight tricks and the end of the road. A club lead from dummy gave West the balance of the tricks.

The hand illustrates how important it is for the declarer to start with a pessimistic view of his prospects. The assumption by South that he had five diamond tricks was not borne out by subsequent events. It was within the realm of possibility that one of the opponents might have all four outstanding diamonds. If the diamonds divided in any other way, ten tricks were a certainty. South's efforts, therefore, must be bent to playing the hand on the basis that one defender has all the diamonds. This chain of reasoning, if carried one step further, would have resulted in nine tricks.

If the missing four diamonds are presumed to be in the West hand, they cannot be caught by any line of play. Since declarer cannot cope with this possibility, he dismisses it and turns to one he can deal with, namely, that there are four diamonds in the East hand. These can be trapped by proper play.

A diamond is played to the ace at trick two, and when West shows out, another is returned. South wins East's ten with the king, and reenters dummy with a heart for another diamond play. East's jack is caught, and South makes all four of his diamonds. These, together with the four heart tricks and the ace and queen, produce nine tricks. Dummy's sixth diamond, it is true, gets lost in the shuffle, but it is a minor tragedy.
