MONSTER MEETING IN THE RINK

The Conclusion of Sir Charles' Speech

THE LIBERALS COURSE ON PREFERENTIAL TRADE

And Other Important Matters Effectively Dealt With.

But there is another question. He is the Leader as I suppose you know (or was the leader at that time) of the Liberal party in the Maritime Provinces. I need not tell you that in 1891 these loyal gentlemen who are now shouting their loyalty were advocating the policy of unrestricted reciprocity. What did that mean? It meant that Canada would turn its back on England and take the tariff of the United States of America made at Washington against not only the world but England included. Why? The Liberal Conservative party rose in its might and they fought a great battle. The great leader they then possessed led the forces—the Right Hon. Sir John A. McDonald (Cheers.) We denounced their policy as disloyal—a policy that would deprive Canada of British institutions and lead to the annexation of our country to the United States of America. We won the battle and what happened. Edward Blake, a man who towered head and shoulders above these pigmies who sit on the Treasury Benches now, came out and over his own signature in the London Times newspaper gave his reason for refusing to go into that fight with his old friend. He said he would not contest the constituency, have nothing to do with them, and he went into private life. Why? Because he said he would not fight under false colors, and because he believed that their policy would result in the destruction of British institutions in Canada. But these gentlemen are always willing if you can show them the path to office, the path to salary—to adopt a suggestion, and they came to the conclusion that they must take a different path from that of Unrestricted Reciprocity. They held a great convention, and the upshot of it was that they got rid of that incubus of Unrestricted Reciprocity which had ruined all their prospects. Sir Louis Davies was instructed to use his great eloquence in informing the people of the Maritime Provinces what that policy was, and he went down to that convention and stated to the people at Annapolis something which is so important that I must first venture to read a half dozen lines. This is the speech as you will find it reported in the press at Annapolis in 1893, after the convention defining the policy of the Liberal party:—

"Well, gentlemen, I say no more. Whatever doubts and difficulties there may have been about our trade policy in times past there is none now. Our platform is clear and definite. Today the people stand face to face with such an issue and the next contest is to be between free trade and protection. A 17 or 20 per cent. tariff was high enough to give protection to the manufacturer. If it were not, the manufacturers should go down."

There is the policy of the Liberal party at the mouth of their then leader in the Maritime Provinces, Sir Louis Davies. Where is he now? Why, gentlemen, can you credit it that the man who delivered that as the policy of the Liberal party in dealing afterwards with the fiscal policy of the Conservative party that they had denounced for 18 years as the most vile robbery that was ever inflicted upon an honest and confiding people, as his very first act set down and increased the tariff over and above any that had ever existed in Canada by a very considerable amount. He now stands convicted out of his own mouth of having at the last general election entirely misled and deceived the people of this country as to what he would do if he was entrusted with power. He has been a member of a government that I say has continued and endorsed the National Policy in all its essential features. I do not blame them for that; it is the only redeeming feature in their last four years of public life. Their only redeeming feature is to be found in the fact that when they came face to face with the full responsibility of carrying out their delusive fallacies, or take the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party that for 18 years they had denounced, they gave the lie to all their past 18 years declarations and saved the country, and I give them credit for it. (Applause) The imputation upon their character was a small matter compared with the stopping of the progress and prosperity that we now enjoy and in which we all rejoice. Sir Louis Davies has not only failed in law, on the floor of Parliament, but he failed in understanding the first principles of the tariff that he has adopted and that his party have committed themselves to. He denounced the Liberal-Conservative party in London for having had a discriminating tariff against England, and he said we intend to change all that. But where did they change it? They changed it by increasing that discrimination (if any existed, which was not the case) in the most marked degree. Here is the statement of matters as they stand: He said we (the Conservatives) sent a large amount of exports to England and we took a comparatively small return. He said we sent a small amount of exports to the United States and they sent back to us an overwhelming supply in return.

He was going to correct all that, and I will show you how he has done it:

While our exports to Great Britain have increased over 60 per cent from 1855 to 1899 our exports to the United States have increased less than 10 per cent.

For the same period our imports from the United States have increased about 70 per cent and our imports from Great Britain have increased less than 20 per cent.

Our imports from all other countries of the last five years show a greater percentage increase than those from Great Britain.

I intend to keep you longer on this subject than I shall close by making a few observations (and they shall be very few) on the present position of the parties in Canada. I have given you the reason why an independent elector should on the present occasion pronounce with no uncertainty in favor of the great Liberal-Conservative party; and I am able to tell you that I stand here tonight in your presence having in my judgment seen with my own eyes, and heard with my own ears the evidence that leaves me no room whatever to doubt that when the coming battle is fought we shall win. (Applause) When the battle is concluded I entertain no doubt that a good working majority will be found standing behind the Liberal-Conservative Party and enable them to form a Liberal-Conservative Government from that day. If you want the evidence look at what occurred in the Province of Manitoba—a province where they could only elect six men out of forty four years ago. Hugh John Macdonald, the worthy son of a worthy sire (great applause), a man who has attained a high position in the estimation of all right-thinking men in this country whatever party they may belong to, has carried that Province by a handsome majority and the doom of the Liberal party in Manitoba is sealed. I held 57 great meetings, starting in Nova Scotia and the eastern provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, the Northwest territories, and British Columbia last year. I held these meetings where the capacity of the buildings alone limited the audiences, and met an enormous body of the electors, Liberal and Conservative. I came back from the west with the conviction forced upon my mind that the moment there was a general election it is doubtful if the Liberal party could elect one man from Ontario to the shores of the Pacific. (Hear, hear) We came down to the province of Quebec, and after the defeat in Manitoba the Liberal party staked their existence upon carrying the city of Sherbrooke. Mr. Ives, the former representative, had suddenly died and an election was held. Notwithstanding that in the province of Quebec the majority of the electors are French and Catholic; notwithstanding that Sir Wilfrid Laurier went there and used all his eloquence, that four of his ministers went there, and that the Government of Quebec sent their ministers to fight the battle; notwithstanding that they put some two hundred men all over the constituency (I won't say what to do, but we believe that no less than $25,000 of the money of the Liberal party was expended in the contest and we know that whiskey flowed as a river; notwithstanding they fought that battle to the death with two Governments in their favor, Mr. Macintosh, a highly respectable gentleman, but not a man of any means, was able to carry the constituency. (Applause) I say I am proud to be able to stand here tonight and say this to you. No man has less personal interest in this matter than I, because I would be only too glad to be relieved of the cares and anxieties of public life, but I owe it to the Liberal-Conservative party to devote what little time remains to me in endeavouring to place that party in power who when in power served this country so faithfully. And while I say this without being personally interested in the matter, but having had an opportunity that few men have had of knowing the condition of this country from end to end, I say that if you should, as I hope you will, elect Mr. Stewart (great applause) as the representative of West Queen's in the coming election, you will send him to join a handsome majority of the representatives of Canada in the House of Commons, and to sustain a Government which will be composed of able men of high standing and character who will carry out the treaties, who will carry out the policy and who will maintain the principles of the great party to which we have the honor to belong. (great and continued applause.) I wish to say ladies and gentlemen that in view of the work that my friends have done for me and the unfortunate accident which has almost incapacitated me from discharging those duties effectively, I am going to ask you to allow me to retire in order that I may have a little rest. I hope to meet you at no distant day and to exchange congratulations with the gallant band that carries our banners in Prince Edward Island on the victory of which I have just spoken. (Applause.) Hearty cheers were then given for Sir Charles Tupper.
