

THE EXCHANGED OVERCOATS

Several young folks were assembled at Mr. Lawrence's one evening for the purpose of amusement, and after they had quite exhausted their budget of fun, they requested Mr. Lawrence to tell them a story. As he delighted in pleasing young people, he readily complied with their request, and asked what they would have.

'Yours and Lenora's love story,' echoed several merry voices.

'Well, then,' said he, 'if you will be seated and knee quiet, I will tell you about our courtship.'

They seated themselves around him, and with Lenora's lustrous black eyes beaming on him he began his narrative.

'Lenora was sixteen and I was twenty-two when my story begins. I was visiting at Uncle John's in Benton, when I became acquainted with her. It was at church, the first Sunday after my arrival, that I first saw her. She was a pretty girl, with black eyes, dark brown hair and rosy cheeks; which charms, you see, she still retains in wonderful perfection, though many weary years have passed since then. As she was an intimate friend of Uncle John's family I soon became acquainted with her. We met often, and spent many happy hours together. The result was that scarcely a month had elapsed ere I found myself so deeply in love with her that I was resolved to tell her how dear she was to me, and ask her to be my own sweet Lenora. Nor was it long before I had an opportunity of executing my resolution. We were seated on a rustic seat in a beautiful spot in her mother's garden. It was a pleasant morning in May, and nature was dressed in her richest garb. The flowers were in full bloom, and the ground was covered with velvet green. The morning from a blue sky through the rich foliage that clustered above our heads, lent a magical lustre to the surrounding scenery. It was a spot that the artist might be glad to have reproduced on canvas, or the poet to have depicted in rhyme. We had often sat in that self-same spot before; but on this morning it possessed more charm and was more fascinating than ever. With Lenora's head leaning on my shoulder and her hand placed confidently in mine, I believed myself the most favored of mortals. I thought if I only could have such a dear girl with me all the time, I would be the happiest man in the world. It seemed that she divined my thoughts, for she asked me what I was thinking about. I told her that I was thinking of the short time that remained until I would have to go home, and how lonesome I would be when so far away from her. A tear stole down her rosy cheek, and her head hung lower on my shoulder. I put my arm around her, drew her to my breast, and somehow, though I could never tell just how, I asked if she would be my own dear wife. Her reply, which was a sweet 'Yes,' seemed to have almost transformed that little garden spot into heaven. I held her longer in my arms and pressed passionate kisses on her red lips. When we parted an hour afterward, we had vowed to be forever true to each other. After that our meetings became more frequent, and life was a thousand times sweeter to me than ever before.'

Several weeks had passed pleasantly away, when the time for my return home drew near. It was about the middle of July. Having gained her parent's consent to our marriage, I promised to return in September to claim my bride.

With a farewell meeting with Lenora, in which all our vows were renewed and many parting tears were shed, I took passage in a stage-coach for Clifton, where my father lived. It was eighty miles distant, and I was three days in going. The first thing I did after I had received the congratulations of my friends was to write to Lenora, to tell her of my journey over the steep and rocky road among the mountains and hills on the old stage-coach. A sweet correspondence ensued, and through the long summer days that followed, the greatest pleasure that I enjoyed was in reading Lenora's letters and writing to her.

About the first of September I received a letter from Lew Rowland, requesting me to come to Greenacastle and spend a few days with him before his departure for California.

Lew and I had been schoolmates, and were very intimate friends. For the past three years he had been clerking in a drug-store in Greenacastle; but becoming weary of such a monotonous occupation, and not being satisfied with the small income derived from it, he had resolved to seek more romantic and profitable employment in the gold fields of California.

The time for my return to Lenora was only two weeks off. However, I determined to comply with Lew's request, and, on the day after the receipt of his letter, I started for Greenacastle.

As I went by railway, I was only a day and night on the road; and nine o'clock on the following morning after my departure from Clifton found me in Lew's room, in an upper story of a hotel in Greenacastle.

I found Lew in good spirits. He was making preparation for his journey. Of course, I took an opportunity to write and tell Lenora of my trip to Greenacastle, and assured her that if kind Providence favored I would be with her at the appointed time.

Ch'town, Dec. 23, 1878—

The Greatest Medical Discovery since the Creation of Man, or since the Commencement of the Christian Era.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

DR. MELVIN'S CAPSICUM POROUS PLASTERS are acknowledged by all who have used them, to act quicker than any other plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

Physicians in all ages have thoroughly tested and well know the effect of Capsicum; and it has always been more or less used as a medical agent for an outward application; but it is only of very recent date that its advantages in a porous plaster have been discovered. Being, however, convinced of the wonderful cures effected by DR. MELVIN'S CAPSICUM POROUS PLASTERS, and their superiority over all other plasters, they now actually prescribe them, in their practice, for such diseases as rheumatism, pain in the side and back, and all such cases as have required the use of plasters or liniments. After you have tried other plasters and liniments, and they have failed, and you want a certain cure, ask your druggist for DR. MELVIN'S CAPSICUM POROUS PLASTER. You can hardly believe your own convictions of its wonderful effects. Although powerful and quick in its action, you can rely on its safety for the most delicate person to wear, as it is free from lead and other poisonous material commonly used in the manufacture of ordinary plasters. One trial is a sufficient guarantee of its merits, and one plaster will cure hundreds of your friends.

Ask your druggist for DR. MELVIN'S CAPSICUM POROUS PLASTER, and take no other; but on receipt of 25 cents for one, $1 for five, or $2 for a dozen, they will be mailed, post paid, to any address in the United States or Canada.
