To any representation we make. The Watches we sell are the best money can buy. And the plain truth is strong enough to sell them in these days of sham and misrepresentation, take time to think before buying a watch. We have some exceptionally good movements in plain nickel and silver cases. They make good, sensible, everyday watches. If a single one proves less trustworthy than we promise we'll take it back willingly.

CWI-NAIN AND OTHERS.

The Philologist With an Attack of Malaria and the Intellectual Drug Clerk.

The philologist had an attack of malaria. He went to the intellectual drug clerk and remarked:

"Will you kindly put me up ten five grain pills of cwi-nain?"

The drug clerk, with the nonchalant confidence of his kind, answered:

"Ten five grain pills of ki-nin? Certainly."

"No; not ki-nin," said the philologist, "but cwi-nain."

"I thought you said cwi-nain."

"No. You misunderstood me. I said cwi-in-in," answered the philologist.

"Ah! I stand corrected. We have been in the habit of calling it ki-nin among the profession."

"Have you? When I went to school, the proper pronunciation was cwi-nain, or it may have been cwi-nine."

The intellectual drug clerk looked puzzled. He apparently suspected that he was being guyed. He attempted to create a diversion by suggesting that the philologist might find the—ah—the—ki-nin—more effective in the form of capsules. The philologist said:

"I have been in the habit of taking my cwi-nain in the form of pills."

"You may have it any way you like, professor, and you may call it whatever you please," said the drug clerk as he bowed with an expression that indicated that he felt himself somewhat crushed.

"Well, I'll call it cwi-in-in. But you can call it almost any old thing and you will be pretty sure to be right, according to somebody who has made a dictionary in the last 50 years. If it works in as many different ways as it is pronounced, I will either be killed or cured before morning."

Then the philologist laughed and said, "It's a great word," and the drug clerk murmured, "And a great medicine."

Later they were seen behind the prescription desk discussing something that usually is absorbed with quinine and is generally pronounced excellent.—New York Sun.

Housekeeping.

If a woman is in good health there is no more beautiful employment than housework. Generally speaking, there is no happier woman in the world. But how different when every breath is pain, every step torture! This state of health, in nine cases out of ten comes from derangements of the delicate, feminine organs of generation. The family doctor inquires first concerning these. He most usually insists upon an "examination." From this the modest woman naturally shrinks. She is right. Except in very unusual cases of "female weakness" examinations are unnecessary. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a simple, natural remedy for these ills. It cures safely, permanently.
