HORSESHOEING.

HAVING secured the services of MR. WILLIAM TUCKER, a native of this Island, who has had nine years' experience as a Horse-shoer in the United States, I am prepared to supply a long-felt want in this line. Mr. Tucker has reduced horse-shoeing to a science, and is prepared to perform all classes of work in a common-sense and scientific manner. I need not inform the intelligent horseowner that the art of the horse and condition of the feet must be understood to weight a horse properly and to successfully operate thereon. Numerous patrons already admit the merits of the work performed, and recommend his system of shoeing.

Customers can always depend on prompt attention and entire satisfaction.

Tom Farrington's Ghost.

"I think it's about the best thing I can do."

That was what Tom Farrington said as he sat on the edge of his study table and kicked his heels together. He had been busily engaged in thinking—something he did not often do. But he had come to the conclusion that the school was dull and needed waking up, and he felt sure that he was the boy to do it. So after considerable painful reflection, he had hit upon an idea—a very old idea, but it was the first time he had ever struck him; so far as he was concerned it was as good as new.

"Yes," he said, "it's about the best thing I can do. I've always read stories that when people appeared to be dreadfully astonished and excited they looked as if they had seen a ghost; so a ghost it shall be. To-morrow night will be a good time. The moon will not rise till late. Now, let's see; I suppose I ought to tell some one of the boys, so that he can help me to hide the things quickly when the hunt for the ghost begins, and then I can join the crowd as if I had just come from my room."

So Tom told Harry Williams at recess that day, and then prepared to create an excitement that night. As the hour approached for the exhibition of the ghost, Tom found that he had caused great excitement within himself. He was quite nervous as he dismissed Harry with whispered entreaties not to mention the meeting to a living soul, and then prepared himself for the display. He had procured a white nightcap, with a pointed top, which he put on. Then he whitened his face with chalk obtained from the school room. Next he took a sheet off his bed and wrapped it around him like one of the togas of which he had seen pictures in his Roman history. He surveyed himself in the looking-glass, and said, "I think I'll do now."

Then he turned the gas down low, and started to leave the room. But when he opened the door he almost fell backward from surprise and fear; for just outside the door stood a figure which filled him with unspeakable terror. Was it the principal of the school?

No; it was another ghost. It was a very much more dreadful-looking ghost than Tom. It was taller and stouter, and had a remarkably healthy appearance, as if being a ghost agreed with it. Its face was not exactly white, but a sort of a pale green, and it had red eyebrows and black teeth. Tom was unable to speak. He stood and stared at the spectre until it strode majestically past him into the centre of the room. Then it turned around and beckoned Tom.

"Come in and shut the door," it said. The voice was not unpleasant to hear, but it did not strike Tom as being agreeable. However, there was nothing for him to do but obey. He shut the door, and looked timidly at the unexpected visitor. It was such a ghastly ghost!

"Well," it said, "aren't you going to ask me to sit down? It's not often that one ghost calls on another. I think you might be sociable and ask me to sit down."

"Oh, c-c-certainly," replied Tom; "s-sit down and b-b-be comfortable."

The strange ghost reclined in Tom's easy chair, while Tom sat down in a stuffed chair opposite him. The dim gaslight threw a flickery, feeble light around the room, and the new-comer's eyes gleamed fitfully as he gazed slowly around him.

"You are exceedingly well quartered here," said the phantom. "I don't think I ever met a ghost who had such a comfortable place. Now where do you suppose I have to live?"

"I'm sure I don't know," said Tom. "Well, I live in an old ruined tower just outside of Naples."

Tom was now more alarmed than ever. This might be the ghost of an Italian brigand.

"I see you are surprised that I don't speak Italian," said the visitor. "I can do so, however. Di cosa temi? Perché dimostri pallida? Facciamo core. That's Italian. It means, 'Why do you fear? What makes you turn pale? Let us be merry.' I'm not an Italian ghost, though."

"Ah, in-in-deed?" said Tom, feeling that he ought to say something.

"No; I was an American, but I became a ghost in Italy."

The visitor paused again, and once more Tom could not bear the silence.

"When," he asked, "d-d-d-d you c-come over?"

"About five minutes before you met me," answered the stranger. "I just jumped down the crater of Vesuvius, and came through the bowels of the earth. But now I have a proposition to make to you."

"What is that?"

"You haven't been a ghost very long, have you?"

"N-n-no," stammered Tom.

"I thought not. If you had, you would know better than to wear such a nightcap. They are out of fashion for ghosts long ago. However, I think they'll admit you. I am here for the purpose of attending the eight-hundredth annual convention of English-speaking ghosts. It is to be held in the woods just north of this place at midnight. I want you to come with me. We shall meet some prime old spectres there, I assure you. I understand that Julius Caesar is going to preside. Come along."

"No-n-no, thank you," said Tom, beginning to tremble violently.

"Nonsense," said the spook. "Why, it'll be the making of you. You don't know how to enjoy being a ghost. You stay in your room too much. You'll enjoy the chilly midnight air and the ghastly ceremonies. Ghosts always do. Don't be bashful. You're young yet, but when you've been a ghost a few centuries, you'll hunger and thirst for this sort of thing."

"I'm afraid you'll have to ex-ex-cuse me-me," said Tom, with a sickly attempt at a smile; "I d-d-don't feel very w-w-well to-night."

"What! Why, who ever heard of a ghost's not feeling well! Ho! ho! ho! ho! ho!"

The spectre uttered a peal of hoarse laughter which rang through the place with fearful echoes. Cold perspiration broke out on Tom's brow. He must escape somehow.

"W-w-well," he said, "if you'll excuse me-me for a m-m-minute, I'll get ready."

The ghost looked at Tom with a puzzled expression, and said:

"Well, I don't see that any getting ready is necessary. But go ahead if you like."

Tom drew his sheet about him, tried to look very solemn, and stalked slowly out of the room. The moment he was in the hall he dropped the sheet, and started at the top of his speed for the principal's room.

"Oh, Mr. Jones," he cried, rushing wildly up to the master, "come, quick! there's a ghost in my room."

"There's one in mine, I think," said the principal, taking Tom by the chin and turning his face to the light. "Who are you?"

"I'm Tom Farrington, sir. I was going to play ghost, when a real one came into my study. Please come, sir."

The principal looked serious and taking Tom by the hand, drew him out of the room. The other boys, aroused by Tom's flight through the hallway, came out and crowded around in wonder. The principal led the way to Tom's room and entered, Tom hanging back in terror. Mr. Jones turned up the gas.

"There's nothing here, my boy," he said. "You must have seen yourself in the glass."

"Oh, no, no," said Tom, shuddering; "it talked to me, and it had a green face."

The boys, seeing no ghost, began to giggle at Tom, and some of them laughed outright.

"You needn't laugh," said Tom. "If it was here now, you wouldn't be so brave." "No, don't laugh," said the principal. "Tom must have seen something."

And after that, as long as Tom remained in the school, the boys always asked him in the morning if he had seen any ghosts the night before.

What was it that Tom saw?

The Struggle with Mormonism.

The United States Government has been for some time past engaged in a desperate struggle with the Mormon Church in Utah, and so far with little success. The Edmunds bill is good enough as far as it goes, but it needs to be supplemented by further legislation. The chief danger to be feared from the Church is that it does not confine itself to the promulgation of its religious tenets, but claims the position of a usurping government. As defined by one of its leading apostles, it "is the only legal government which can exist in any part of the Union. All other governments are illegal and unauthorized." It has raised troops, made war upon and massacred subjects of the United States, formed courts of its own, entered upon rebellion against the nation, and is continually fomenting dissiduity. One secret of its power in the past is its well-organized lobby at Washington, which is credited with an expenditure of $250,000 last session. To counteract this "The Loyal League of Utah," composed of patriotic citizens of all parties, has been formed for the purpose of maintaining agents at the capital whose business it is to destroy, if possible, the influence of the Mormon lobby upon Senators and Representatives. In this way only can legislation be secured for the purpose of erasing the power of the Mormon priesthood.

Jules Verne's Record Broken.

The time made on the Canadian Pacific Railroad from Montreal to Vancouver, a distance of 2,900 miles, is 136 hours. This will soon be reduced to 90 hours. While specials may make the distance in 90 hours, when the short line is completed next autumn, through trains will make the trip from Halifax to Vancouver, a distance of 3,500 miles, in 116 hours. Passengers will be able to make the trip from London to Vancouver in 240 hours or ten days. The time from Vancouver to Yokohama by the proposed Pacific line of steamers will be 12 days, from Vancouver to Hong Kong 17 days. The time from Halifax to Hong Kong will be 21½ days; and the trip from Halifax around the world to Halifax may be made in 61 days, thus breaking Jules Verne's record by 19 days.

Some Exciting Scenes.

Exciting scenes were witnessed on Saturday in County Clare, Ireland. While a number of bailiffs, accompanied by one hundred policemen, were evicting tenants in Maynoe, a wild district, the bells were rung and horns sounded, and the people assembled, headed by priests. Three tenants were reinstated as caretakers, and in two instances the bailiffs had to abandon their attempts to evict the tenants, owing to the menaces of the populace. The police were unable to quell the disorders, and withdrew from the scene during the disturbances. Father O'Flynn, Inspector Heard and several policemen were injured by being hit with stones.

Joseph Perry, aged 73, and Robert Price, aged 68, two misers, cousins, who were living in a frame building at 1025, Locust Street, Philadelphia, had not been seen for over a week, and in breaking into their house on Friday, the police found both dead. Perry retired from an auction firm ten years ago with a fortune estimated from $100,000 to $250,000, which he invested in real estate, stocks, bonds and mortgages. Price was a carpenter and both were addicted to liquor. It is thought they were frozen to death.
