Demonstrations Planned By City Hospital Unions

Officers of Locals 805 and 826, National Union of Public Employees, have announced that public demonstrations in the form of picketting by placard, are being planned for this week.

The pickets, who will be union members employed at the Charlottetown and Prince Edward Island Hospitals, will in all probability display their placards within sight of the Provincial Building.

"That is the building where the men who turned us down — and who say that wage increases would cost $1,000,000 — are located" an official said.

Some of the placards, which are now being made up, will bear such messages as "Shaw Government refuses to provide funds so the union can sign an agreement with the hospitals" and "Support local 805 and 826 in their struggle for better wages."

FIRST FOR CH'TOWN?

As far as it could be learned, there have never been union demonstrations of this type in the business section of the city. In the late 1940's, however, picketing by placards was carried out when a union contract was sought with Canada Packers Limited.

One union member said that the demonstration will help inform the public of the situation facing the union in its attempt to get higher wages for its members. "Generally, people have been misinformed about the situation," he said, "and don't understand our problem."

A number of meetings of the locals are scheduled for this week, and John F. MacMillan, the union's Maritime region director, is expected to arrive in Charlottetown today.

It was also learned during the weekend that the national president of the NUPE is expected in the city next weekend, when he will address a public meeting.

In a brief review of the situation, the locals, successfully negotiated contracts, providing wage increases, with the administrations of the hospitals but the hospitals felt they could not honor the contracts as their funds come from the provincial government through the Hospital Services Commission.

While it was estimated that wage increases would cost $32,000 for the two hospitals, the government felt that it would not be fair if employees of only two hospitals got increases and those of other hospitals in the province did not.

After a survey by the hospital commission, the government estimated that raises for all hospitals would amount to "close to $1,000,000.

Members of the union locals voted to ask the department of welfare and labor to conduct a strike vote among the non-profession workers of the hospital unions.

CONSIDERED ESSENTIAL

The department advised the union that under the Industrial Relations Act, the members of the locals were considered essential to the maintenance of the institutions and prohibited from strike action.

The union still wants to have its strike vote.

The department is in the process of advising the union whether or not it will supervise the vote or turn down the request.

The union does not expect that its request for a vote will be granted.

"Whether it is or not," the union official said, "we intend to carry out our placard demonstrations this week. We already have plenty of support; all the local unions are behind us. We think the people should be informed of the situation."

Cecil J. Stewart, Hampshire Was Breeder And Exhibitor

The funeral for Cecil J. Stewart of Hampshire will be held this afternoon from the United Church of which he was a member, Sunday School superintendent for more than 40 years and a devoted worker during his lifetime.

Mr. Stewart had been in indifferent health for some time although he kept his troubles to himself, and few, excepting members of his own family, knew of his physical ills.

Mr. Stewart had many interests. He was a director of the provincial exhibition association for many years, served in that capacity under the presidency of Lt.-Col. D. A. MacKinnon; and was one of the 12 men who took over the association from Col. MacKinnon in 1947. He became president March 16, 1959 and won the respect of fellow directors and plant employees for his fairness and efficiency in making decisions relating to the fair management. "Mr. Stewart's ability will be missed at the plant a great deal more than some of the people there realize" a fellow director said yesterday.

WAS WINNER

A long-time breeder of registered Holstein cattle and Clydesdale horses he exhibited both in Maritime show rings in former years; had taken both the male and female Holstein championships at the Maritime Winter Fair, among other competitions, and his horses were consistent winners of red ribbons and championship awards up to the time of his death.

Mr. Stewart was a large shipper of potatoes and other produce as well as of livestock.

CLYDESDALES

An outstanding farmer he was a strong supporter of farm organizations and was secretary-treasurer of the P.E.I. Holstein-Friesian Association from the time it was organized more than 40 years ago until a few months ago and is a former national director. A contemporary said last night Mr. Stewart was one of the Maritimes' outstanding breeders and exhibitors of registered Clydesdale horses for more than 30 years.

He brought in some of the best Clydesdale stallions that ever came to this province, the same livestock spokesman emphasized.

Mr. Stewart and three sons are left to mourn. The widow is the former Lella Cruys of Kingston. The sons are Wylie on the old homestead at Hampshire, Clifton a partner in the firm of Batt and MacRae Ltd., Charlottetown, and Errol who is Atlantic supervisor at Moncton for the John Deere machinery company. Mrs. Hampson Bowman, Charlottetown, is a sister.
