COUNTESS VON WALDERSEE MADE HER HUSBAND.

Count Von Waldersee's appointment as commander of the allied forces in China has moved many people to recognize the ability of the Countess, who was Miss Lee, of New York. The Countess Von Waldersee was the most bitter and powerful of the enemies of Prince Bismarck. T. P. O'Connor says of the Countess and the "International Countess":

"Up to the time of his marriage Count Waldersee devoted himself entirely to his military duties. Under the influence of his wife, however, he began gradually to take an interest in politics. Countess Waldersee is one of the cleverest and most audaciously ambitious women in all Europe, and in the early eighties she was one of the most attractive. Even now, although well advanced in years, she is singularly charming, at once brilliant and sympathetic. If rumor is to be relied upon no sooner was she married to Count Waldersee than she made up her mind that he should be installed in Prince Bismarck's place as Imperial Chancellor. Be this as it may, she certainly threw herself eagerly into every movement that had for its object the thwarting of Bismarck, and she chose out his bitterest enemies for her special friends.

"Dr. Stocker, the famous court chaplain who Bismarck dismissed from his office, was her coadjutor and advisor in all she did. As time passed she founded her salon—the first and last that Berlin has ever seen—and a perfect hotbed of anti-Bismarck intrigues it was; of anti-Semitic intrigues, too, for the countess hates the Jews only one degree less bitterly than she used to hate Bismarck. She has imbued her husband, too, with her feelings on this point. Indeed, if the anti-Semitic journals are to be believed, he is now as strong an anti-Semite as she is and would be the leader of the anti-Semitic party were he not a soldier.

"Meanwhile the Countess had gained unbounded influence over the present Kaiserin, to whom her first husband was related; she had gained, too, the firm friendship of the present Kaiser, then Prince William. She is the only woman, indeed, to whom his majesty has ever been known either to listen with serious attention or to appeal for advice. In those troublesome days that followed the old Kaiser's death hardly a day passed without his paying her a visit. He would discuss social problems with her for the hour together, and whenever he appeared in public her husband was by her side.

"Naturally enough, Prince Bismarck had from the first regarded the friendship between Prince William and the Waldersees with scant approval; he went out of his way, indeed, more than once to treat the Countess with marked rudeness. When he took to hurling sarcasms she was one of his favorite targets. It was not, however, until Prince William was Kaiser that the old chancellor realized how formidable a rival he had. Then he soon became thoroughly alarmed; for not only did his majesty continue to lavish marks of his favor on the Count, but upon more than one occasion he turned pointedly from Bismarck to him for advice."

MARRIAGE IN GERMANY.

Elopements are never heard of in Germany, and yet there is no such thing as getting married there without the consent of the parents. Certain prescribed forms must be gone through or the marriage is null and void.

When a girl has arrived at what is considered a marriageable age her parents make a point of inviting young men to the house, and usually two or three are invited at the same time, so that the attention may not seem too pointed, says the New York Commercial Tribune.

No young man, however, is ever invited to the house until he has called at least once, and thus signified his wish to have social intercourse with the family. If he takes to calling on several occasions in rather close succession it is taken for granted that he has "intentions," and he may be questioned concerning them.

In Germany the man must be at least 18 years of age before he can make a proposal, but when it is made and accepted the proposal is speedily followed by the betrothal. This generally takes place privately, shortly after which the father of the bride, as he is then called, gives a dinner or supper to the most intimate friends on both sides, when the fact is declared.

What is known as the "pay-wedding" is popular in Germany. The bride receives the guests with a basin set before her, and into this each visitor entering the reception room drops either some jewelry, a silver spoon or a piece of money. In some parts of the country the expenses of the marriage feast are met by each guest paying for what he or she may eat or drink.

It would strike us as a very curious reception, but the visitors pay high prices and the happy couple make a handsome profit out of their wedding, as many as 300 visitors often being present at such festivities.

A special despatch from Cape Town says that United States Consul Stowe, who goes to the United States shortly on leave of absence, has expressed the opinion that peace will be proclaimed on October 11, the anniversary of the commencement of hostilities in South Africa.

A Berlin despatch states: "The statement published in Paris that France, Russia and Germany have arrived at a complete understanding in regard to the retention of troops at Fekin and that Germany abandon her demand for the punishment of the instigators of the outrages before the peace negotiations begin, is denied here officially."

The Austrian steamer 'Styria Lloyd' has sailed from Lorenzo Marques having on board four hundred Transvaal refugees, part of them being Irish-Americans. All their expenses have been paid by the Transvaal government. Each man received thirty shillings ($7.50), and will be paid eight pounds ten shillings ($42.50), on landing at any port which he may select.

The appended table issued by the War Office shows the total casualties to Oct. 1st since the beginning of the war in South Africa:—

	Officers.	Men.
