CHAPTER XVIII

"Stango will know nothing," she told him confidently. "It will be a secret thing. But we had another thought—Tsembao and I. If this is a 'sit down' fight what will the men do in the morning? For when no man musters for work, Stango will send the Samoans for them."

"There are only eight of them," he pointed out. "What can they do? Eight men can't make a hundred and fifty people do what they don't intend to do. The men can laugh at them."

"That is what I said!" she exclaimed with a sudden fierce little laugh. "And if they beat the people with their sticks, you will tell the men to kill them! And when Stango comes..."

"Here, steady on!" he interrupted firmly. "There must be no talk of killing at all. We can beat Stango without that if they will do what I tell them."

"It shall be as you say, Turlo," she agreed submissively, but with a queer note of disappointment in her voice. "But there is another thing. We think that when you have talked to the men, it will be better if you do not come back to your house, but stay in Tsembao's fale. We are afraid that when Stango hears what you have done, he will try to kill you."

"He won't do that," he declared. "But I don't know that it would not be good idea for me to stay in the village till all this is over. I could control things better from there."

"And I will stay there, too," she told him. "We will live together in Tsembao's fale, and he will be glad." She paused for a moment, and then added: "And when you come back to your house, Turlo, I will come and live with you here."

There was a sound of voices outside, and he half turned towards the window.

"All right, if you want to," he agreed, thinking it might be an advantage to dissociate her entirely from the trader. "I don't suppose you'd be very comfortable with Stango after this anyway, and as your chief hasn't turned up yet..."

"I am not thinking about my chief now," she interrupted softly. "I am thinking only about you. Would you like me to live with you?"

He turned and glanced at her sharply, and at the look in her eyes he realised with a shock that

Bernard-MacDonald Wedding

St. Dunstan's Basilica, Charlottetown, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Tuesday morning, June 2, with Rt. Rev. Mgr. Patrick McMahon performing the ceremony and celebrating Nuptial Mass, when Miss Ruby MacDonald, daughter of Mrs. Mary MacDonald and the late Mr. MacDonald of Charlottetown, became the bride of Harold Bernard, son of Hon. J. A. Bernard and the late Mrs. Bernard of Tignish, Bernard.

The bridal attendants were Mrs. Richard Hogan, sister of the bride as matron of honor and Mrs. Wilfred MacDonald, bridesmaid.

The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Omer J. Bernard. Ushers were Mr. Walter Bernard and Mr. Jerry MacDonald.

Following the wedding, a reception was held at the Charlottetown hotel for 80 guests. The appropriately decorated table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake, topped with a miniature bride and groom and cut in the traditional manner by the happy young couple.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard are spending a honeymoon in Central Canada. On their return they plan to spend a few days in Tignish before taking up residence in Campbellton, N.B., where Mr. Bernard is employed with Imperial Oil Co.

to see what had frightened him. Standing on the other bank at the very place where he had been a moment before was Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer. She was snoring and blowing and stamping her feet, threatening to come right across after Old Man Coyote.

Perhaps you can guess how he felt when he saw who it was who had frightened him into getting such a wetting. He started as he shook himself hard to get the water out of his coat. That water hadn't cooled his temper one bit. He barked all sorts of threats at Mrs. Lightfoot, but when Mother Lightfoot threatened to dash into the water and come across, he discreetly slipped away. Somehow or other he had lost all appetite for a dinner of Baby Deer.
