THE MYSTERY OF POLLY LOPP.

BY OPIE READ.

CHAPTER I—CONTINUED.

She raised her hands as if imploring him not to cut them off. Miss Lopp never forgot that pleasing picture, the dark eyes half humorously pleading, the abundant hair caught up and there

"You must not say you won't," the girl went on, giving Miss Lopp no time to answer, "until you know how much in need of a sensible companion I am. Father—"

"I haven't anything to hide," she said, "I don't mind telling you that, having grown very tired of city life, I have come here to rest, and not being able to rest without work, I have decided to lease a little paper and play with it."

"Talk like a woman in a show, dingled if you don't. Not being able to rest without work is not one on me, but we will let that pass."

"Just as well, I suppose. Yes, it is my purpose to live here a year, and then if I like the place well enough I may remain permanent."

"Ah, hah," said the old fellow, "that is to say, you thought you married and settled down here, and now you are going back for a year? I hear you think that marriage is about played out in the cities. I have seen better looking women than you air, but then, I reckon you might do on a pinch, and you never can tell just how soon a pinch is going to take place. My old woman has been dead about two year and I know after while that I ought to pick up a chunk of a wife, may do so this fall if my own down here on the creek turns out well."

"Your shirt collar is unbuttoned again," she said.

"Blame it if I don't go to the blacksmith shop and get me a horsehair nail just to accommodate you, but you are going to run the newspaper. Never heard of a woman running a paper, but I have heard of 'em riding a straddle and I don't see why a newspaper should be come new."

"By the way," she said, "I should like to find some pleasant place to board. I don't care to stay at this hotel."

"You are talkin' sense, now, miss. Let me see: I live about a quarter of a mile from here—just an easy walk—and if you don't mind you may board there. My daughter Nell lives with me, and you'd like her. Oh, she eats more books than a sheep do straw, always a chawin' 'em, and you'd get along well together. She's too smart for this town, and you and her could trot together right well. Well, I'll send her over to see you. I reckon you are all right. You'll understand takin' care of yourself. Good day."

"She arose and as he reached the door she called him."

"Nothing, only I hope that you will not forget to go by the blacksmith shop."

The old man puffed and trumped heavily down the stairs, and at the bottom he found Alf and the other fellows waiting for him. "Don't put yourself to uneasiness on her account, gentlemen," he said. "She can take care of herself, and if she can't she can take care of her or come mighty blame light it; but I reckon that expression is a little too strong for a man that thinks as much of a revival as I do, and after the Lord's name."

"YOUR SHIRT COLLAR IS UNBUTTONED AGAIN."

"But hold on and tell us something about her," Alf insisted.

"I don't know a blessed thing about her except that she's all right, and that's all anybody need to know."

Shortly afterward a young woman called at the hotel, introduced herself to the stranger and said that following the advice of her father she had come to ask Miss Lopp to board with her. "We have a new, big old-fashioned house," she said, "and you may have all the room you want so don't say you won't. Will you please not say you won't?"

The visitor had taken a seat on the piano stool and not ungracefully was slowly turning herself half round and then back. She was a comely girl and it was evident that she was the belle of the neighborhood, and it was also evident that she cared not for this distinction, that she had studied and read herself beyond any commonship that the village might offer, and that simply to be admired had long since grown tiresome to her. Miss Lopp never forgot that pleasing picture, the dark eyes half humorously pleading, the abundant hair caught up and there

"When I probably met them years ago perhaps I was not aware that they were going to refer to you as 'old top'?"

"Neil laughed, and the old man scratched his head. "Well, now, we'll say that you couldn't help meeting them," he went on, "but we can't say that you had to become so well acquainted with them as to let them call you Polly. I gad, I don't call you Polly, and I'm the mayor of this town and have been for ten years this comin' July, I gad. Hope the Lord will in the meantime excuse both I gads. Hah, now, answer me that, will you?"

"There, I know you couldn't say you wouldn't when you were brought to understand it all. And we'd better get on," she added, springing off the stool. "You shall have a large front room, but it has a rag carpet, woven half sentimentally by a woman that lives far from here—thought so much of me she wove it with half price. But you don't mind that, do you?"

"What, the sentiment or the half price?" "Why, the rag carpet, of course. I did not know but you might expect velvet on the floor."

"My dear child," said Miss Lopp, "it was not the thought of a carpet that brought me into this neighborhood, and to tell you the truth I don't care whether the floor is covered with a rag or with saw-dust."

"Oh, I just know that I shall like you, because you are not stupid with evenness of a time and the opinion of a village are necessarily narrow; here people are suspicious of strangers and are ever on the lookout for an opportunity to suspect one another, so it would be impossible for me to make an explanation that would be satisfactory to them."

"But, my dear Polly, you can make an explanation that will be satisfactory to me."

"Not now, my dear, but after awhile I will. Your father is calling you."

The old man stood at the garden gate, whistling the name of his daughter, and when she had gone to him, having left Polly sitting on a bench in the kitchen house, the old fellow said: "Neil, go into the house and stay till I come, and when I do come I may have some mighty interestin' news for you."

"Oh, it doesn't worry me so far as I am concerned, but what will the people say? Indeed, what won't they say?"

"Neil, the view and the opinion of a village are necessarily narrow; here people are suspicious of strangers and are ever on the lookout for an opportunity to suspect one another, so it would be impossible for me to make an explanation that would be satisfactory to them."

"How did your daughter pass her examination for a position as teacher?"

"B—Pass! She didn't pass at all. Maybe you won't believe it, but they asked that poor girl about things that happened before she was born."

"Mr. Hobbs—Dear, this paper says that sewing is to a woman what whistling is to a man."

"Is that so? Well, here, take a couple of little Dick's trousers and whistle a couple of patches on them while I go to the matinee."

Fudly (beating to put his umbrella in the rack)—Isn't there danger of some-body taking the wrong umbrella by mistake?

Dudly—Wrog umbrella's are never taken by mistake.

Cured of Chronic Catarrh.

A Remarkable Cure—J. W. Jenison, Gilford, spent between $200 and $300 in consulting doctors, tried Dixon's and all other treatments, but got no benefit. One box of Chase's Catarrh Cure did me more good than all other remedies, in fact, I consider myself cured, and with a 25-cent box that.

The Conditions in Egypt.

Cairo, March 21.—Sir H. Kitchener, the Sirdar of the Nile expedition, has arrived at the front, and the second column has arrived at Al Khedi. A small body of dervishes approached the troops, but fled before the artillery fire. Abdul Hamid has been reinforced from Berber.

Cured Weak Back for 25 Cents.

For two years I was dosed, pillled and plastered for weak back, scalding urine and constipation, without benefit. One box of Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills relieved, three boxes cured. E. J. Smith, Toronto. One pill a dose, price 25 cents.

Barrels of Whiskey Burned.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 29.—Twenty-six thousand barrels of whiskey in government warehouses were destroyed to-day. The loss is $325,000, exclusive of government.

Catarrh Cured for 25 Cents.

Neglect cold in the head and you will surely have catarrh. Neglect nasal catarrh and you will as surely induce pulmonary diseases or catarrh of the stomach, with its disgusting attendants, foul breath, hawking, spitting, bloating, etc. Stop it by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure, 25 cents a box cures. A perfect blower enclosed with each box.

Dr. Parker said a few days ago when discussing the question of closer Imperial relations that the resolution which would strike the keystone of English sympathy would be a resolution in favor of better lines of communication throughout the Empire. There was, however, men by which Canada could get ten or fifteen per cent. more out of the English market, without preferential trade, than is now obtained. This could be done were Canadian producers to study the English markets and follow the example set them by their fellow colonists in Australia and New Zealand.

A Child Cured of Eczema by Chase's Ointment.

"My six-year-old daughter, Bella, was afflicted with eczema for 24 months, the principal seat of eruption being the ears. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, but, without innumerable medicines and ointments, and took the child to medical specialists in skin diseases, but without result. The doctor advised the use of Chase's Ointment, and since using the eruption has all disappeared, and I can confidently say my child is cured."

(Sgd.) MAXWELL JOHNSTON, 112 Anne St., Toronto.

A herd of 45 elephants in the Barnum menagerie was recently thrown into such trouble by the appearance of a rat that double chains had to be put upon them to keep them from breaking away.

The old stoic philosophers recognized suicide as the logical outcome of their system, and if statistics prove anything, they have ample of evidence to that effect. A recent Sunday in Chicago no less than seven people died by their own hand, and in the United States more than 4000 commit suicide in the course of a twelve-month.

"Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds"

Women are not all beautiful but all women are attractive who are beautifully dressed.

Beauty unadorned may do in poetry, but the nicely fitted gown is the desire of every true woman. Friendly's dress fabrics have done much to realize a woman's ideal by offering in their texture, appearance, fit and wear, a character and distinction which no other dress goods, however excellent, have quite attained to. And now Friendly's have something new. The "Eclairs" is all the rage. It is even better than the Henrietta so much admired. The "Eclairs" has something which the Henrietta lacks—to wit: greater width, greater weight, and a superior drape and quality. And then it has an exquisite surface which gives it an almost regal presence. "Warp" and "Weave" are the name, Friendly's, stamped on every five yards.

To drive dull care away, And banish melancholy, Get astride a CAVALIER Wheel Is a motto for every man.

"CAVALIERS" are strictly High Grade Wheels. Price $100.00
