MR. AND MRS. ALFRED ROSS WEBSTER

Heirloom Pendant Is Worn By Barbara Scott Cameron

A diamond pendant that had been worn by her mother and grandmother was "something old" for Barbara Scott Cameron when she became the bride of Alfred Ross Webster. Her floor-length gown of white peau de soie was enhanced with Brussels lace at waistline. Softly pleated skirt swept to a cathedral train. Bodice featured scooped neckline and elbow-length sleeves. Floor-length veil misted from a circlet of lily of the valley and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and lily of the valley.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Victoria, B.C., was decorated with standards of white stocks and gladioli for the noon ceremony at which Rev. Charles Scott officiated.

Soloist Stanley Martin sang "Still as the Night" during the ceremony.

Parents of the principals are Mr. and Mrs. Clyde F. Cameron, 3040 Devon Road, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Leigh Webster of Charlottetown, P.E.I. Mr. Cameron gave his daughter in marriage.

Floor-length gowns of deep rose pink peau de soie, styled on similar lines to the bride's, were choice of maid of honor, Jane Cameron, sister of the bride; bridesmatron, Mrs. F. S. Dawson, Calgary, and junior bridesmaid, Anne Cameron, another sister. They complemented their ensembles with matching satin shoes and self-fabric circlets of rosebuds. Pink rosebuds, feathered carnations and lily of the valley formed their cascade bouquets.

Donald Webster, Calgary, was best man for his brother, and guests were ushered to pews marked with white carnations by Geoffrey and James Cameron, brothers of the bride.

A three-tier wedding cake, roses and candles centred the bride's table for a reception which followed in the Dingle House. Toast was proposed by Dr. J. G. Patterson.

Following a honeymoon trip to California, the newlyweds will make their home in Halifax, N.S.

The bride's going-away outfit was an imported Swiss suit of oyster blue silk linen with floral hat in brown tones and matching lizard accessories. Gardenia corsage completed the ensemble.

MARY HAWORTH

Young Girl Is Unhappy Due To Critical Parents

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 16 years old. My problem is my parents. They won't let me date and will hardly allow me to go skating or anywhere even with my best girl friend.

My mother is very critical of the way I talk, walk, laugh; the way I look; the clothes I wear and everything else she can think of.

She is constantly complaining about me not doing anything aruond the house; but I do more housework than the average teenager. My parents seem to think one lives just to work.

My father thinks it is a sin for me to talk to or even look at a boy. A week ago a boy came to our house to visit me and we sat and talked in the den, with both my parents sitting there too.

As soon as the boy left they started bawling me out because he had come here. They said the next boy who comes, they are going to throw him out of the house. I've never done anything wrong or to be ashamed of so I don't understand why they treat me as they do. Can you explain and advise me? Thank you. B.L.

DEAR B.L.: My heart goes out to you. You do indeed have a grievous problem.

During the teens, a girl is more or less at her parents' mercy, as regards having a decent social life or becoming a social cripple in relation to boys. Her experience on that score will indelibly affect her prospects of marriage, either helping her to make a successful choice on the one hand, or driving her towards ruinous mistakes on the other hand.

Your parents' attitude, as described, with respect to the boy's drop-in visit last week, is very ungodly, very uncivilized, potentially very destructive in its effect upon your social development.

Their ugly bluster about throwing out of the house the next boy (if any) who comes to see you is really shocking. It is a body blow of sorts to your poise. It tends to leave you feeling unaccountably smirched and degraded simply because a boy has registered interest in you.

It is difficult enough, heaven knows, for most teenage girls to build up friendly self-protective social ease in relation to boys, even when they have the steady psychological support of kindly parents, who are hospitable to their children's friends as a matter of course, using the opportunity to get to know them and thereby deftly teach their daughter to distinguish wheat from chaff.

In your case, as I get the picture, your mother is unconsciously envious of your youth and resentful of your needs of parental help. She is, in short, a rejecting mother.

As for your dad, apparently he had the sort of background that leads him to think that furtive sex skirmishing is the be-all and end-all of boy-girl sociability. Hence his morbid misgivings, threateningly ventilated, on the recent occasion.

I've written the foregoing for your parents' eyes, hopeful that it may invoke a difference for the better in their treatment of your hunger for growth.

If it doesn't, in the near future, you should appeal to your pastor, or Sunday School teacher, or a family service agency counsellor, or a YMCA counsellor, or a YWCA counsellor, or other mature, reputable, professionally accredited youth leader, for firsthand help in safely surmounting the serious social hindrances that your parents' benighted behavior imposes.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Veil Of Summer Haze Lies Above The Fields

By day now, in sunshine, the shimmering haze of summer lies above the fields — that silken blue veil we envisioned sometimes longingly, when Winter held our countryside in its wide white grip... One of these times when the farmers come by thirsty from the haying, lads' bare shoulders glistening with perspiration and faces stained from their exertions, we shall wish then, it is likely, for moments of that refreshing wintry coolness for them, in the heat and toil of their day!

Alex, this afternoon, ordinarily content to remain away from the farming, put together a lunch to carry with him, when he chose to accompany Mack and his grandfather to Rob's and the weeding in the turnip patch there. How good it is for such little lads, to enjoy the outdoors and the sunlight the summer gives, to keep fit and refresh the young bodies and minds for the schooldays ahead.

"Now where is Alex?" Peter wondered in his absence. "I've searched everywhere, but I can't find him!" he sighed.

The younger farmer, his dad, went on this excellent day for the chore, to assist at a shearing on a farm down the River Road, past the school and beyond... This, it so happens, was the first farm and family we knew in this district when we came to it, a stranger, back in our school-teaching years. It was then, and continues to be an attractive and fruitful farm. Its fields slope in a gentle decline from the woodlands down to lave feet in the river's tides. Daughters, sons and step-sons were then in the home of that farmer, which now houses a young generation of the name.

Of the former children, a step-son, a fine lad, was destined — though there was then no shadow of adverse cloud in the sky — to make the supreme sacrifice in World War 1. Nice memories of this schoolboy we have, as also we keep of other Service lads of the community, who in those far years, fared forth to battle for our freedoms, and winning, "grew not old" or returned, more or less aged beyond their years.

But of late in the district thoughts have strayed to the daughters of the home in days gone, one of whom had recently answered that far summons which separates, and bereaves where it falls. Not the woman, who years back had chosen the States as her adopted land, we recalled personally, but the happy-hearted girl of that young time we knew: the blue-eyed Scottish lass, fair of skin, brown hair curling in pretty tendrils, hands busy, and to the lonely one, or those in need of care, always understanding and kind. A friendly smile, her heart, gave out a dimpling merry laugh... She will never again look down or across the Island river she knew. Another river, but one which we think flows smoothly, and admits to a lovely shore and land, where all is light and peace, she has come to.

Sunset and evening star, we have now. And a daughter of the district has answered the "One clear call" leaving her own and those who walked the young years with her indeed bereft — yet with only pleasant memories of that kinship, and friendship that was.

Until Monday — — Diary — Good-night.....

PUPPET THEATRE

Little Angel Theatre in the Islington district is the first devoted solely to the art of the marionette to be opened in London in a century.

Girl Guide Heritage Camp Is This Year At Brackley

Brackley Beach is this year the scene of P.E.I.'s Heritage Camp "Abegweit Centennial" Attending the camp are 2 girl guides from each province in Canada and 2 girl scouts from the United States. Many of the girls arrived at the camp hours behind schedule due to the poor weather but all 26 are now settled and ready to begin the two weeks of fellowship, fun and learning about the Indian, English and French culture of P. E. I.

In charge of the camp is Commandant, Mrs. Ferno Rogers of Summerside assisted by Mrs. Earl Taylor, provincial camping commissioner. The quarter-master is Mr. Morley Wylie of Summerside; camp nurse is Betsy Houston and swimming instructress is Joan Hall of Slemon Park.

The itinerary was arranged by Lillian Duchemin who heads the Special Events Dept. This program will include visits to the main points of interest on the Island such as the Montague Museum, Government House, the Confederation Centre, Woodleigh Replicas and Green Gables. The guides will also attend the Summerside Lobster Carnival, the horse races at the Charlottetown Driving Park and the Historical Pageant at the Confederation Theatre.

After two weeks thus spent, full of both fun and learning, the guides will return to their homes throughout Canada.
