Agricultural.

THE INFLUENCE OF FORESTS ON CLIMATES.

The cutting down and burning of large forests hss in this Island been very extensively carried on during the past few years. In many parts of the Island fire wood is very scarce. We notice that many farms near Charlottetown are entirely without any wood, and their owners are compelled to haul their wood some ten or fifteen miles. In a few years time we believe that many farmers will have to use coal instead of wood, so great will be the scarcity of wood, if the wholesale cutting and burning is allowed that is now practiced. Some persons will set fire to a woods, quite regardless of the consequence it may do to their neighbors. A farmer up West told us the other day that last summer he lost about £200 worth of timber by the carelessness of a neighbor in setting fire to a patch of woods. But beside the great loss of the wood, we believe it is injurious to the soil to clear the land entirely of forests. In the Athenæum of June last there are two paragraphs bearing on this subject, to which we direct the attention of our farmers :—

We have frequently directed attention to the mischevious effects of the reckless cutting down of trees in France and southern Europe, where the climate becomes every year drier, and the soil is washed away by destructive floods, to the impoverishment of whole Provinces. Warnings have long been uttered by competent observers, but in vain ; a sort of rage for cutting down woods has prevailed for the last two centuries. But at length the people most interested —the inhabitants of the countries involved—have begun to open their eyes to the question, and a petition has been laid before the French Senate, which points out that the army might be employed in planting trees on the now barren hill slopes and plains. It would be something new to exercise soldiers in so peaceful and beneficial an undertaking, and we should be glad to see the experiment tried. Planting might prove more profitable than fighting, plenty would replace penury, and meteorologists would have the opportunity of witnessing a singularly interesting experiment.

The second paragraph refers to the Mauritius, and is in the following terms :

During the past five years the Meteorological Society of Mauritius have extended their system of observations so as to include twenty-two stations where the rain-fall is registered. Though the time is comparatively short since the system was adopted, some remarkable results have been obtained. At Cluny, a place in the south-east of the island, bordering on mountains and forests, the total rainfall was, in 1865, more than 192 inches ; at Gros Callioux, sixteen miles distant to the north-west, the rain-fall in the same year was, omitting decimals, thirty-six inches. These figures give the highest and lowest quantity registered in the year. Another fact which has become apparent seems to strengthen the theory much discussed of late, which shows a dependence between rain fall and forests. In some parts of the Island, only a few years ago, a dry cloudless day was of rare occurrence ; whereas dry days are now frequent, and the cane-fields suffer from drought. Some of the rivers are much diminished in volume, and some streams have almost entirely disappeared. lakes and marshes are drying up ; in consequence of which the yield of sugar cane has decreased, and on some estates the cultivation has been abandoned. Other estates on the high ground near the edge of the forests, which were formerly considered too cold and wet for a good crop of canes, are now very productive. But with a continuance of the cause, it is believed that they too will become subject to the same effect. These, in the words of the report published by the society, are " incontrovertible facts," however they may be explained. And though there is no diminution in the rain-fall for the whole of Mauritius, the deficiency is great in districts in which extensive denudations have been made. It should never be forgotten that if forests have no other effect they intercept some portion of the rain, and assist in preserving the humidity of the soil. When exposed to the full glare of the sun, springs and rivers dry up rapidly. Although these remarks relate to an island in the tropics there is much in them that applies to our own island, where new theories of farming have of late occasioned the destruction of miles of hedgerows and acres of timber.

Racy Literature.

A Mistake.—Charles to the alter led the lovely Jane, and to her father's house returned again ; where to convey them on their wedding tour, already stood a brilliant coach and four. When, lo! the gathering showers at once descend, clouds roll on clouds, and warring winds contend; this moves him not, but in he hands his bride, and seats himself enraptured by her side ; when thus to cheer the fair one he begun : " I hope we shall soon have a little sun." But she to whom the weather gave no pain, who heeded not the blast nor pattering rain, but most about her future state bethought her, replied, " My dear, I'd rather have a daughter."

The following order, verbatim et liberatim, is said to have been recived by an undertaker, from an afflicted widower: " Sur—Sur—my wife is ded, and Wants to be Berried tomorro. At Wonner klok U knows wair to dig the hole—bi the side of my too Uther waifs—let it be deep."

Aunt Betty was trying to persuade little Jack to retire at sunset, using an argument that all the little chickens went to roost at that time.

Yes, said little Johney, but the old hen goes with them.

Aunty tried no more arguments with him.

Vell, says Hans, I sells you some goot butter for forty cents,—anybody else forty-five.

Customer smiles at the joke, pays for butter, and vanishes, with the impression that Hans is entirely too smart.

But one day Hans is caught in his own trap.

Bridget wants to purchase some soap, An' what is the price of soap a bar ? asked she.

Dat is goot soap, Biddy, says Hans, I let you have 'em for twenty cents a bar —anybody else ten cents you know.

All right, says Bridget, give us five bars at that price.

Hans passes over the soap, Bridget lays down fifty cents, and away walks five bars of soap.

Hans smells a rat.

Here, by dunder, dere is a mistake here! Five bars of soap is one dollar.

Bridget stops indignantly.—But did'nt you tell me the price was twenty cents to me and ten to anybody else ? Well, bad luck to ye, it's not for me at all, it's for Mrs. Mclaney, who lives next door

An editor in Alabama having read an article in Hall's Journal of Health advising that husband and wife should sleep in separate rooms, says: " Dr Hall can sleep when and where he pleases, but for himself, he intends to sleep where he can defend his wife against the rats and all nocturnal foes as long as he has got one to defend."

A bashful young man in Deleware who was afraid to propose to his sweetheart induced her to fire at him with a pistol, which he assured her was only loaded with powder ; and after she had done so, fell down and pretended to be dead. She threw herself wildly upon the body, calling him her darling and her beloved, when he arose and married her.

Why ought a greedy man to wear a plaid waiscoat? To keep a upon his stomach.

Anatomists do not state the fact, but it is so nevertheless, that women have two skeletons. One is covered by flesh, and the other—isn't.

" Life is sweet and death bitter," said Sir Anthony Kingston to Bishop Hooper at the stake.

" True, friend," replied Hooper, " but the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come more sweet."

" Where are you going?" said Selwyn to an acquaintance. " To see a friend." —" Well, I'll go with you, for I never saw one yet."
