TIM HOLT STARRING IN "RIDERS OF THE RANGE"

Rustling and murder on the Arizona frontier furnish the basis for exciting action in "Riders of the Range," RKO Radio's tense action Western starring Tim Holt.

Holt as a cowpuncher and his Irish-American pal are employed by a rancher after Tim saves her from the grip of a crooked gambler and head of a rustler ring. The cowpunchers are framed for the killing of the secret head of the cattle thieves. How the two escape jail, trail the real killer to his hideout and ultimately clear themselves provides breath-taking action.

Richard Martin, Jacqueline White and Reed Hedley head the supporting cast in the film produced by Herman Schlem and directed by Lesley Selander from the screen play by Norman Houston.

Judy Musical Stars Garland and Johnston

Judy Garland follows up her big success in "Easter Parade" with another delicious romantic comedy, "In the Good Old Summertime," this time co-starring with Van Johnson and with the amiable character actor, S. Z. Sakall, having a prominent part in the proceedings. Of added interest is the fact that the new M-G-M Technicolor offering, now on view at the Prince Edward Theatre, marks the return of Buster Keaton, famed comedy star of silent films, who proves himself to be as funny as ever in the role of a blundering music store clerk. Garnished with a flock of old and new song hits, among them the title song, "Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland," "Put Your Arms Around Me Honey," "Last Night When We Were Young," "I Don't Care" and "Wait 'Til the Sun Shines, Nellie," the story has Judy as an employee in the music store owned by Sakall. Romantic and lonely, she has inserted a newspaper advertisement inviting correspondence with an intelligent young man. Unknown to her, Van Johnson, who has answered the ad, is head clerk in the store and is also completely in the dark as to the identity of his feminine correspondent. Judy, at first convinced that she detests the patronizing and cocky Van, changes her mind when she believes him to be on the verge of marrying pretty violinist Marcia Van Dyke. The subsequent unravelling of these romantic complications against a framework of song and hilarious comedy makes for one of the most captivating musicals to be shown here in many a season.

JACOBY ON Canasta

For Beginners - 4

When you meld cards at Canasta you must put them down on the table during your proper turn to play. If you keep meldable cards in your hand (as you would at gin rummy), they are not considered melded. When a hand ends, you get credit for all the cards you have on the table, but you lose points for all the cards in your hand, and it makes no difference if those cards happen to match melds.

Here's another important point about Canasta melds; your melds and those of your partner are treated as though you were one person. You can start a meld and he can add to it, or vice versa. However, you can never add to an opponent's meld. If the opponents put down three kings, you can't "lay off" a king of your own on their meld. You might put down three kings of your own, but that would be an independent meld rather than a lay-off.

We have already seen that when you pick up the previous player's discard you must also take all of the cards in the discard pile. Since it is an advantage to get those cards, you might suppose that everybody would be picking up discards at every turn. Fortunately, this cannot be done.

You cannot pick up a discard unless you can meld it on the table then and there. In most games of rummy you are allowed to pick up a discard "on speculation" or just to improve your chances for a meld. In Canasta, however, there are no speculations of that kind; when you take a discard you must put it right down on the table together with whatever other cards may be needed to make it a proper meld.

The requirements for melding the previous discard are not always the same, as a hand develops. Sometimes it's easy to take a discard, and sometimes it's hard. We'll go into that in our next lesson.

Save these simple installments. If you're a beginner, you'll soon be able to profit from the tips given in the second part of each article. If you're an experienced player, save the first half to teach the game to others.

For Experienced Players - 4

When you need only 50 points for your first meld, you should assume that your partner has the count. It isn't important for you to make the first meld just to relieve him of the burden of adding up to only 50 points.

Hence the chief advantage of making the first meld from your hand is that thereafter you will need only one matching card and a wild card to pick up the discard pile. You must avoid paying too much for this advantage. It is sound policy to make the first meld from your hand in this situation when the meld uses up only three or four cards - particularly when you will still have a wild card left in your hand after making the meld.

For example, you might meld a joker and any pair, or a deuce and two aces; or three aces; or even a deuce and three ten-point cards. However, it would be poor policy to use your only wild card to make such a meld. Part of the idea is to have a wild card still in your hand after the meld to help you take the discard pile later on.

It would be very poor policy to use more than four cards from your hand to meld the 50 points. When your hand is as poor as all that, have patience and wait for a favorable discard. In the meantime perhaps your partner can make the first meld. If you can pick up a good-sized discard pile as you make your first meld, it doesn't matter how many cards you must use in that meld. The cards of the discard pile will remain in your hand to make sure that you are not left card-poor.
