DOWN WITH PIGS

To the Editor,
In an article of desperation last week we read, "The Thursday night Pig N' Whistles, which have become a ritual trademark of UPEI, are in grave danger of becoming an extinct species". Could it be the aftermath of the Symposium, or is our campus suffering from something foreign to its mass - a case of rational cognition? Ah, but alas, it seems the folly of apathy is to blame for the fall of the Pigs. What sublime folly. For never has there been an institution more deserving of its name, nor more befitting of its death.

The Pork Chopper

RESIDENCE PROBLEMS

Dear Mr. Editor,
In their decision regarding the fate of Marian Hall, we hope that the Business Department (or the appropriate body that makes such decisions) would take into consideration the renovations needed.
To begin with, there are problems with many of the building's bathrooms. That on the first floor is a case in point. One shower is expected to serve eleven guys (in September, the number was fifteen). Those on the floor were assured that additional bathroom and shower facilities would be forthcoming in November. As of yet, the assurances have still to materialize.
During the inter-residence party in October, the bathroom was left in shambles.

The shower's rugged plastic frame just could not withstand the beating given it, and the curtains were torn off the window. The decision to glue the shower back together was an obvious one. It can be said that the shower's present state proves one thing - glue doesn't hold forever. The curtain - well where that is now is anyone's guess.
While the main grievance of this letter remains with the issue of bathrooms and their dilapidated state, one should not assume that there are no other complaints. Many are having problems with their heating. One side of the building is perpetually cold. Of course, we cannot forget the poorly fitted windows, chipping ceiling plaster, or the fact that a good coat of paint is needed here and there.

It is hard not to look with envy at the luxury next door, but we are reminded that the guys in Marian Hall are "bigger eaters". By the way girls, you must be congratulated. We hear that next year new curtains are in order for every room in your building.

Needing and hoping for change
