BEYOND THE CITY AN IDYL OF THE SUBURBS BY A. CONAN DOYLE

CONTINUED. "I'll tell you what, admiral," she exclaimed suddenly, "if I were you I should get your boy out of this partnership."

"But why, madam?" "Because he is tied to one of the dearest, dearest faces in the whole city of London."

"Jeremiah Pearson, ma'am? What can you know of him? He bears a good name."

"No one in this world knows Jeremiah Pearson as I know him, admiral. I warn you because I have a friendly feeling both for you and for your son. The man is a rogue, and you had best avoid him."

"But these are only words, ma'am. Do you tell me that you know him better than the brokers and jobbers in the city?"

"Man," cried Mrs. Westmacott, "will you allow that I know him when I tell you that my maiden name was Ada Pearson, and that Jeremiah is my only brother?"

The admiral whistled. "Whew!" cried he. "Now that I think of it there is a likelihood."

"He is a man of iron, admiral—a man without a heart. I should shock you if I were to tell you what I have endured from my brother. My father's wealth was divided equally between us. His own share he ran through in five years, and he has tried since then by every trick of a cunning, low minded man, by base cajolery, by legal quibbles, by brutal intimidation, to juggle me out of my share as well. There is no villainy of which the man is not capable. Oh, I know my brother Jeremiah. I know him, and I am prepared for him."

"This is all new to me, ma'am. For my word, I hardly know what to say to it. I thank you for having spoken so plainly. From what you say this is a poor sort of consort for a man to sail with. Perhaps Harold would do well to cut himself adrift."

"Without losing a day." "Well, we shall talk it over. You may be sure of that. But here we are at the station, so I will just see you into your carriage and then come to see Harold running down the road after him."

"Why, dad," he cried, "I have just come from town, and the first thing I saw was your back as you marched away. How could you see a quick walker that I had to run to catch you?"

The admiral's smile of pleasure had broken his stern face into a thousand wrinkles. "You are early today," said he.

"Yes, I wanted to consult you." "Nothing wrong?" "Oh, no; only an inconvenience."

"What is it, then?" "How much have we in our private account?" "Pretty fair. Some £800, I think."

"Oh, half that will be ample. It is rather thoughtless of Pearson."

"Well, you see, dad, when he went upon this little holiday to have he left me to pay accounts and so on. He told me that there was enough at the bank for all claims. I had occasion on Tuesday to pay away two checks, one for £80 and the other for £130, and here they are returned with a bank notice that we have already overdrawn to the extent of some hundreds."

The admiral looked very grave. "What's the meaning of that, then?" he asked.

"Oh, it can easily be set right. You see, Pearson invests all the spare capital and keeps as small a margin as possible in the bank. Still it was too bad of him to allow me even to run a risk of having a check returned. I have written to him and demanded his authority to sell out some stock, and I have written an explanation, however, I had to issue several other checks, so I had better transfer part of our private account to meet them."

"Quite so, my boy. All that's mine is yours. But who do you think this Pearson is? He is Mrs. Westmacott's brother."

"I can see a likeness now that you mention it. They have both the same hard type of face."

"She has been warning me against him—says he is the rankest pirate in London. I hope that it is all right, boy, and that we may not find ourselves in broken water."

Harold had turned a little pale as he heard Mrs. Westmacott's opinion of his uncle's partner. It gave shape and substance to certain vague fears and suspicions of his own which had been pushed back as often as they obtruded themselves as being too monstrous and fantastic for belief.

"He is a well known man in the city, dad," said he.

"Of course he is—of course he is. That is what I told her. They would have found him out there if anything had been amiss with him. Bless you, there's nothing so bitter as a family quarrel. Still it is just as well that you have written about this affair, for we may as well have all fair and above board."

But Harold's letter to his partner was crossed by a letter from his partner to Harold. It lay awaiting him upon the breakfast table next morning, and it came to the heart into his mouth as he read it and caused him to spring up from his chair with a white face and staring eyes.

"My boy! My boy!" "I am ruined, mother, ruined—ruined! He stood gazing wildly in front of him, while the sheet of paper fluttered down on to the carpet. Then he dropped back into the chair and sank his face in his hands. His mother had her arms around him in an instant, while the admiral, with shaking fingers, picked up the letter from the floor and adjusted his glasses to read it.

"I am ruined, mother, ruined!" "My dear daughter," it ran, "by the time that this reaches you I shall be out of the reach of yourself or of any one else who may desire an interview. You need not search for me, for I assure you that this letter is posted by a friend, and that you will have your trouble in vain if you try to find me. I am sorry to leave you in such a tight place, but one of either of us must be squeezed, and on the whole I prefer that it should be you. You'll find nothing in the bank and about £13,000 unaccounted for. I'm not sure that the best thing you can do is not to realize what you can and imitate your senior's example. If you act at once, you may get clean away. If not, it's not only that you must put up your shutters, but I'm afraid that this missing money could hardly be included as an ordinary debt, and of course you are legally responsible for it just as much as I am. Take a friend's advice and get to America. A young man with brains can always do something out there, and you can live down this little mischance. It will be a cheap lesson if it teaches you to take nothing upon trust in business and to insist upon knowing exactly what your partner is doing, however senior he may be to you. Yours faithfully,

CANADIAN WOMEN. Their Wisdom and Prudence How They Successfully Overcome Troubles and Bangers.

They Speak of the Marvellous Powers of Pain's Celery Compound

MRS. GILBERT F. SAUNDERS.

Our Canadian women are the most careful and conservative on earth. They do not, as a rule, favor innovations and great radical medicine, unless perfectly assured of happy results for the family and society.

In the field of sickness, suffering and disease, our Canadian women display remarkable wisdom and prudence. Few of them rush heedlessly for the numerous advertised pills and preparations of the day; they are more inclined to observe the popular tradition of the times, to which such attention is now directed.

Feminine conservatism in Canada is not of a stubborn and inflexible character. Our best women recognize merit directly it appears, and are not slow to use the best and most approved means, especially when the restoration of health is concerned.

For some years Pain's Celery Compound has been the chosen and favorite medicine with thousands of our Canadian women in every province. This truly efficacious medicine has almost entirely superseded the method of the old school; it has done more for suffering humanity than all the combined efforts of physicians.

No other medicine of our times has ever drawn forth such hearty and honest commendation and testimony as Pain's Celery Compound from women of all ranks.

In this issue we give the portraits of three Canadian ladies who have been restored and made whole through the marvellous curing power of Pain's Celery Compound. These ladies did not yield to the interested motives of profit-loving medicine dealers; they were not persuaded to try the "something else just as good"; they were fortunate enough to buy the only medicine that could save their lives.
