THE BARCAIN CORNER

is no miser for our store, situated in the heart of the city, it also occupies a warm spot in the hearts of Charlottetown's thrifty buyers. The reason of this is self evident. We have always tried to make the interest of ourselves and of our patrons mutual. That has always been our aim and will continue to be.

OUR STORE JUST NOW

is pretty well loaded down with all kinds of dry goods. We have been opening our fall readymade clothing, and can truthfully say that there is not the like of the stock and the like of the values on P. E. Island—and no charge to see them. If you don't want to buy now all right. Then we have our dress goods department—rather a new department for us—but nevertheless it is worth your while to inspect our stock in this line. Flannelettes, Ginghams, Fleeces and Prints, cheap as can be bought in Charlottetown.

Adulterated Chinese Tea.

It inspires some sort of confidence to know that the wholesale adulteration once so common in China teas is no longer tolerated here or in America, which ranks as the second largest consumer, and that the Celestials have themselves partially recognized the injury which these adulterations worked to their trade. But that they have not completely abandoned their old tricks is proved by the fact that our own customs authorities find it necessary to reject consignments now and again for heavy "facings," and that the American customs not long ago rejected a shipment, but there has certainly been an improvement since the days when plumbago was used to impart a smooth and glossy appearance; when prussian blue, turmeric, china clay, indigo and gypsum were judiciously mixed to produce the different shades of blue or green required; when "lie tea"—made up of tea dust and sand, with starch and coloring matter to form it into small masses and to make it resemble genuine gunpowder—was consumed in this country to the extent of 1,000,000 pounds a year, and when sloe, licorice, chapparral (specially imported into China from California) and ash tree leaves, with 40 per cent of iron filings, constituted a respectable proportion of every pound one purchased.

If the Chinese would but organize their tea industry, import modern machinery and cease their pranks, they might hope to retrieve their position to some extent. The first they can scarcely do. They have no fancy for machinery, and we are afraid the sad lesson of the past 20 years has not been properly learned and profited by.—London Saturday Review.

Diet of the Artist and Literary Man.

The learned German physiologist Moleschott said in reference to the diet of the artist and litterateur: "Well baked bread and lean meat, combined with young vegetables and such roots as are easy to digest and contain a considerable proportion of sugar, form a wholesome diet for thinkers and poets. A large quantity of leguminous seeds, heavy bread, rich pastry and greasy meat create those irritable, morose and almost always slender statesmen who have permitted melancholy thoughts and gloomy imaginations to eclipse all happier views of life in them, so that they have come to consider rods and fetters as the most important promoters and protectors of civilization. A large body and fleshy face may be suitable for monks and gluttons longing for repose, but are not adapted for men of intellect. Abundance of fat in the blood of the brain paralyzes thought and hangs lead upon the wings of the imagination."—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

Maternal Solicitude.

Never marry a homely man if you would lead a happy married life, my daughter. A handsome man takes it for granted that all the women admire him, and he takes no particular notice of them, but a homely man thinks that every woman who looks at him is in love with him.—Boston Transcript.

Insincerity.

Be honest with yourself, whatever the temptations. Say nothing to others that you do not think and play no tricks with your own mind. Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour of the world insincerity is the most dangerous.—J. A. Froude.

There are forests of leafless trees in some parts of Australia. They respire, so to say, through a little stem, apparently answering the purpose of a leaf. The tree is known as "the leafless acacia."

As far as calculations can decide, the temperature of comets is believed to be 2,000 times fiercer than that of red-hot iron.

TO A LADY OF SEVILLE.

Thy mouth is like the Alexandrine rose.
Thy brodered girdle clasps a slender waist.
Who looks into thine eyes' soft splendor knows
That there two worlds of poetry were placed.
The color in thy young cheek richly glows.
A model is thy throat, thy tender hand.
Thy feet scarce crush the poppy cup that blooms
In scarlet flame o'er Andalusian land.
The silkworm envies thee thy dusky hair.
Not threads so soft and shining doth he spin.
But all who come to woo thee soon despair,
For all that wayward heart have failed to win.
May not a bolder sailor sometimes dare
The poetry within thine eyes to read,
To learn the secret that is written there
And know at last that thou art won indeed.
Oh, maiden of the south, of beauty rare,
In all Seville fairest of the fair?
—From the Spanish of T. De Asenar.

A GEORGIA ROMANCE.

Foundation of One of the Largest and Best Families in the State.

A writer in the Savannah News has been delving into the records of a hundred years ago. Among the fruits of his toil he has unearthed a pretty romance. A beautiful girl resided not far from Savannah, beloved by all who knew her. Her handsome brother was found early one morning in a corner of the ricefield dead, a single tiny puncture near the brave heart showing where a gallant's blade had stolen his life. Grief in his sister's heart gave way to fury. She mounted her sable horse and dashed into the city. Before Tonede's tavern she reined her foaming steed and screamed: "My brother's been killed by a man of this town. I will give this purse of £1,000 to the man who will point out the murderer, and to him"—drawing a golden hilted dagger from her girdle—"this blade! Will no one speak? Who is the man?" For several days she repeated the scene, denouncing the unknown in furious outbursts.

In some way she learned that a young South Carolina gallant had dealt the fatal blow. He was even then on his way to Spring Hill to cross the river by night and go on to Charleston. Screaming to her negro servants to follow her, she dashed away along the old Augusta road in wild pursuit, a mad race, but the intrepid girl set her pearly teeth and clung to her plunging horse. At the crest of a bit of rising ground she caught sight of the ferryboat, just pushing off. In the stern stood the man, soothing his frightened horse. She screamed and spurred her horse straight over the steep bank of the stream and, risking life and limb, gained the sandy shore.

Falling from her exhausted steed she drew her blade. Useless—the boat was already ten feet out. She rushed to her horse, snatched a huge pistol from the uppermost holster and fired point blank at the young man's broad chest. The ball broke his arm. He fell. At her imperious command the terrified negroes brought the boat to the shore. Several gentlemen on board restrained her and lifted the wounded man. Under the overhanging banks of the stream, lying on the same cloak, mid the glare of pine torches, she found this was not the man she sought. A mutual love began that night. They were married, and from them are descended one of the largest and best families of Georgia.
