Outlines Plans For Ministry Of Information

LONDON, July 28—(CP)—Sir Samuel Hoare today told the House of Commons of plans to prepare in Great Britain a peacetime "shadow ministry of information" that would function with maximum propaganda efficiency in time of war.

Such a ministry, he said, would extend British culture and explain British policy abroad in time of peace. But in time of war it would be a centre of information both at home and overseas.

The Home Secretary explained that this did not mean creation of a ministry of information capable of being put to use by an unscrupulous government. In time of peace, he said there would be no press censorship or control of public opinion.

Such a ministry would be created only in case of war and any press control then instituted would come "on the basis of co-operation between the press and the censorship department of the ministry of information."

His statement was made after he and the parliamentary under-secretary for foreign affairs, Richard Butler, had asked for supplementary credits required for the Propaganda Department.

Mr. Butler said we are all working for peace and we should remember that the more work and preparation we do for an emergency, the less likely it is to occur.

Sir Stanley Reed, Conservative, former editor of the Times of India, told the House that no mention was made either by Sir Samuel or by Butler of the dominion. In London, he observed, all the dominion and colonial newspapers are represented and are vitally interested in the government's foreign policy.

"They are literally hungry for background information which is of importance in getting informed for the foreign affairs department," he said. "I ask the undersecretary for foreign affairs not to exclude many of the representatives of the Dominions."

"The dominion and department," Mr. Butler replied, "does not apply to the empire or the colonies but the government has the necessity of considering that great empire which has already so much knowledge of us."

He said: "The information department will only be set up in case of war and the foreign public department will continue to give to the world a better picture, if possible, of Great Britain as she really is—a human country and a human people with a great belief in liberty."

The propaganda of expansion for the government's information bureau, Mr. Butler revealed, included the countries of "British institutions" in Athens, Salonica, Cairo, Alexandria, Malta, Lisbon and Bucharest, with a possible office in Turkey as well.

German and opposition members joined in praising the capacities of the foreign press in London and the publicity they give British activities, notably in American newspapers.

The London Foreign Correspondents Corps, Brendan Bracken, Conservative, said, is "unequaled in the world. They are men of great intelligence and integrity and these gentlemen are complaining of the starvation they suffer in news."

"Happenings" in this country, George Strauss, Labor, said "are extremely well reported in America, and if there is a lack of sympathy between the American people and ourselves it is not for lack of knowledge but for lack of understanding or sympathy with the government's policy."

"I suggest that if we want to create that sympathy or increase it, either there should be a change in the government's policy or less news of the government's policy be put in American papers."

ington's sudden abrogation of the 1911 American-Japanese trade pact today and informed sources said it decided to await developments for clarification of questions all Japan has been asking.

The Anglo-Japanese negotiations in the Tientsin dispute meanwhile were adjourned until Monday after a three-hour session in which an authoritative source reported little progress was made.

In London a statement originating in official circles warned against, indirectly, that Great Britain might follow the example of the United States and denounce her trade treaty with Japan if the Tokyo negotiations failed.

PRESS BITTER

Washington's move of Wednesday inspired an angry editorial in the newspaper, Kokusan, organ of the army and ultra-nationalist elements, which declared "opinion is rising in favor of abrogation of the nine-power treaty without further ado."

"In that case" the newspaper said, "the United States should be prepared to face a situation in which her rights and interests in China can no longer be tenable."

Among the questions being asked about Washington's move were why the action came so abruptly and why at the time of the Anglo-Japanese talks.

Many stocks were down from a fraction of a yen (27 cents) to three yen, particularly Spinning Mill and Steamship Securities.
