

"Scuppered" by Hadendowas. PERILS OF THE NIGHT IN THE BRITISH CAMP AT SUAKIM.

(London Daily Telegraph). "Scuppered" is a word which I had never met with till I came to Suakim, and its horrible significance is a new experience to British troops.

Crawling along on all fours, they traverse the space between them and their victims with all the patient caution of wild beasts stalking prey.

THE PIERCE SWEAR IS DRIVEN HOME through his body, the heavy two-handed sword has fallen across him. But the tent is alarmed. There is no time to be lost!

"MURDER!" "MURDER!" I heard the word ring out last night from the Ordnance camp, and then came a cry—the bitter cry of a man suddenly overtaken by the agony of death.

A party of Hadendowas had either crept straight across the camp, or passing along the rear, had traversed its complete length, crossing twice in their way the electric light thrown by the Dolphin; had reached, without being observed, the furthest batch of tents from the starting-point, the nearest to the town.

SUCH IS THE CONFIDENCE INSPIRED by nightly success and impunity that the assassins did not hesitate to creep even into such a desperate position as this. And their work was desperate and terribly complete.

Of the whole of the occupants of the tents—twenty-four in all—only two escaped their spears and swords, while the murderers retreated apparently unharmed. As they went back rifles were wildly emptied after them, and the Carysford fired volleys into the dark.
