

Who Wrote It?

In starting off the 1983-84 school year, in what could not be described as a bang, the UPEI Sun hopefully will be taking shape with the addition of a new editor, I was pleased to see student union, namely Kim Mass, has made a major step in improving the look of the paper by using the university computer, also the graphic design talents of sun editor Denise Richardson will improve the papers look. If you have looked through the first three copies you will have read nothing but gossip, abuse or jokes. This is due to the lack of "talented" writers at the Sun. I'm sure with time a good membership with collect and articles worth reading will be submitted. This is not my main concern. Last year and the year previous, many articles and stories, which often criticized someone or something about the Student Union or other aspects of university life were printed without the author's signature claiming responsibilities for the article. This is sometimes practiced in letters to the editor and is generally accepted but the name must be accessible on demand by the public. This was not a rule of thumb with the Sun last year. Almost every article was written anonymously and in one case when I inquired the authors identity, it was not given to me because the editor didn't even know who the author was.

I hope the new editor will not follow the same path as previous years, and will make upon request to anyone the names of the authors of the letters to the editor, and will print the names to all other articles. This way the general public will know where to go to offer thier praise or criticism.

Definately signed,
