CHAPTER THIRTEEN Part One

He looked surprised as she very carefully removed his arm from about her shoulders.

"Don't be silly, Jimmy. I'm not in love with you."

"Sally!"

"Don't sound so surprised. You swept me off my feet. I admit that. We had a tiny part of an evening together and it was wonderful. But you left before you made sure of your success. Let's try again for me, Jimmy. I'm very grateful."

"You, too?" he said bitterly.

"Funny, I was going to do this differently. I was going to hook you and jilt you at the altar. I was going to do the same thing that Dronda did to you. But suddenly I couldn't do it. Suddenly I thought of what Mike would think." He caught at the name, and laughed. "You mean you're in love with Mike? That's a hot one."

"Is it, Jimmy?" She seemed to consider, cocking her head and peering at him from the corners of her eyes. "Yes, I suppose it is. But there you have it."

"But — but you wouldn't give him a chance!"

"I was afraid to, Jimmy. You see, men like you leave scars. And I was still under the spell. That's why I quit when I caught you kissing Helen. I wanted to get away from you, I wanted to get as far away from you as I could."

"Yet you tried to save me when Perkin was going to give me the sack."

"Sally, don't you see it? All these things you've said are an admission that you still love me. You wouldn't be giving yourself away if you didn't."

"That's the only time a woman can afford to give herself away, Jimmy, my pet. When she has nothing to lose she can be very frank."

Back at the hotel, she found the room in utter darkness and was just a bit surprised. She had expected Helen and Mike to come there to talk things over, had expected to get Mike off to a place where they'd left off in the park. She was half undressed when the door of the suite swung open and Helen, weaving slightly, came gaily in.

"Hi, Sally old gal. What an evening! How's Jimmy, good old Jimmy?"

Sally struggled back into her dress, eyes popping. "Helen, you're drunk!"

"Two beers, so help me. Maybe I should have eaten something, huh?"

"You certainly should have!" Sally finished snapping the fastenings of her dress and caught her just as Helen was on the verge of missing the bed. "Here, take it easy darling. Good grief, I hope Mike had more sense than you. We have to fly back, you know."

"Didn't touch a drop." Helen said with a sniff. "A child. Afraid of mere beer. Hey, isn't that poetry?"

"It is childish. Mike isn't afraid of anything."

"Afraid of you?"

"I said that Mike isn't afraid of anything."

"But he won't be afraid of you any more. We fixed that. We fixed it good. You may be the first to congratulate us. We, Miss Alliston, are going to be married."

If she had fallen into a swoon she wouldn't have been in the least surprised!

Dronda laughed from the door. Still in the flattering evening gown, she came tripping in looking ever so gay, ever so beautiful, ever so dashing.

"How cute," she bubbled. "Helen, you and Mike can get married when we do. A double ceremony. Sweet, don't you think?"

"I do not," Sally said frostily. "And would you mind leaving us alone, Miss Moore? Haven't you done enough damage for one evening?"

"Jimmy?" Dronda chuckled. "Think nothing of it. He asked for it, he got it."

IN MEMORIAM

JOHN McGRATH

The sudden death of Mr. John McGrath, formerly of St. Louis, occurred in Dartmouth, N. S., on Saturday, March 8th, in his sixty-fifth year. Mr. McGrath was stricken with a heart attack while at work and died a few minutes later.

He had been a resident of St. Louis for a number of years and moved with his family to Dartmouth, N.S. about 10 years ago.

He is survived by his wife, three sons and three daughters, as follows: (Mary) Mrs. Sidney Kenny; (Rose) Mrs. William Joyce of Nova Scotia, and (Anna) Mrs. Edie Hard, of Vancouver, B. C., and James McGrath of Ontario, Walter and Kenneth McGrath at home; also one brother and four sisters: Lewis McGrath of Poisdam, N.Y.; Miss Marguerite McGrath of Newark, N.J.; Mrs. Daniel Milligan, Rumford, Maine; Mrs. Larry Curtis, Lynn, Mass.; and Mrs. Harold Warren of St. Louis.

HAROLD LLOYD AT THE CAPITOL

—Acclaimed as the funniest offering the screen has presented in many a year, RKO Radio's "Mad Wednesday" stars Harold Lloyd in the uproarious story of a man who buys a bankrupt circus and, with a hungry lion, sets out to raise a quick bankroll.

Before he attains his goal he panics all the bankers in town and half of the populace, gets involved in the hilarious pursuit of the lion up and down the face of a fifteen-story building, and creates a sizeable one-man riot—all of which adds up to a feast of hilarity for moviegoers.

The trouble all begins when Lloyd, after twenty years as a bookkeeper, is fired from his job. Under the guidance of a bookie, he goes on a two-day binge during which he makes a fortune betting on the horses but spends it all buying the circus. The film introduces as the heroine, Frances Ramsden, whom Lloyd learns he has married in the course of his blackout, and Jimmy Conlin heads the supporting cast as the bookie who is dragged into the subsequent proceedings.

Raymond Walburn, Edgar Kennedy, Arline Judge, Franklin Pangborn, Lionel Stander and Margaret Hamilton are featured in the new and fun-filled production, which was written and directed by Preston Sturges.
