HARMONIES IN DRESS.

BLACK IS TO BE THE SMART TONE THIS SEASON.

A Contrast in Brown and Black—Something About a Blue and Black Combination—Particulars as to Materials to be Used.

Black, the intenest of all colors, is to be the smart tone of the season. It is to be made becoming to blonde and brunette and to all the between types, by having combined with it the color that is most becoming to the wearer. The French dressmaker, that artist in colors, has especially approved of two contrasts; one is black and pale blue, the other, which is decidedly newer, is black and golden brown. Seams are traversed with pipings of the color waistcoats are made of it, revers flare of it, cuffs are formed of it, and once in a while the little frills so much worn last summer overlaid with a swaying fringe of fluffy lace are noted in the combination.

BLACK AND WHITE COMBINATION.

The black silk, the black satin, and all the beautiful black stuffs are in special demand to form the gown proper. Usually the decoration is of the same material as of the gown, but occasionally, as, for instance, where white is used, an absolute contrast in fabrics is chosen. What a London tailor called "a very swagger get-up" is seen in the black and white combination. The skirt, which is the reformed bell shape, that is to say, it has the smooth-fitting front and the flare at the bottom, but a greater fullness at the sides and back and escapes the ground, is of black and white striped silk, the black stripe being moure and the white, satin. The coat basque, which is quite long, is of black broadcloth, has flaring revers faced with white satin, a double-breasted front closed with large white pearl buttons, and deep cuffs of white satin. I mention this gown not only because of its uniqueness, but because it may suggest something to the economical women who have two or three black gowns on hand.

A BLACK AND BROWN CONTRAST.

The black and brown contrast at its prettiest is shown in the illustration. The material used is a fine quality of black camel's hair, and the skirt has a deep flounce of coarse black lace, caught up at intervals with rosettes made of narrow brown ribbon velvet. The bodice, which fits closely, is a long coat effect with an umbrella-like skirt back, while just in front there shows a soft waistcoat of golden-brown silk belted in by a jet band. The collar is jet overlaying brown silk. The shoulder seams are long, sloping, and the full sleeves that fall below them are in three sections; the upper puff is of black, the next one of the brown, and the cuff of brown silk overlayed with jet. The bonnet worn with this is a small flat one of jet with a bunch of brown berries in front and black velvet ties. The gloves are of golden-brown undressed kid.

ABOUT BLUE AND BLACK.

In arranging the combination of blue and black there is much greater simplicity than is shown in brown and black. Simpler designs are selected, and straighter outlines are followed. Probably the best illustration I can give of this is shown below,

The material used is rich black silk. The skirt is cut after a fashion that is much liked, that is, it is divided into two, the upper skirt being exactly duplicate, as far as the shape is concerned, of the lower. The edge of each is bound with blue velvet of that peculiar shade which is at once so lovely to look at and so trying to wear. Of course, this band is on the bias and about an inch of it shows in the skirt. Just above it is a narrow band, that is, an inch-wide band of Persian lamb. The bodice is round and quite plain, its sole decoration being square jacket fronts of the blue velvet outlined with fur. The skirt has a folded belt of the velvet on it, so that it is put on after the bodice. There is a slight fullness of the silk in front, under which the closing is concealed. The sleeves are the usual full ones shaping into the wrists, and they have for their decoration three bias bands of velvet alternating with two of the fur. The collar is a folded one of the silk. The hat worn is of black felt slightly raised about the brim, with five blue velvet roses under it, while some black tips nod on the outside.

THE VARIOUS COMBINATIONS.

As the season progresses the brown and black combination will undoubtedly obtain vogue, and many of the black gowns will be elaborately trimmed either with brown fur or brown velvet. A black camel's hair which has a perfectly plain skirt shows full velvet sleeves of golden-brown, golden-brown belt and a golden-brown collar, while the bonnet is in harmony. Of the pretty long-haired brown furs, many will be noted either as skirt or bodice trimmings on black gowns, while the black furs bid fair to be seen on the brown ones but according to the edict of Dame Fashion it is the black gown trimmed with brown, not the brown trimmed with black, that has her approval. Although one speaks especially of the brown and black and the blue and black, still white and black, scarlet and black and green and black are all in vogue.

ABOUT THE MATERIALS.

The dresses described are, of course, those that have just made their appearance, but they are ones that in every instance can be just as well developed in inexpensive material. The beauiful wool satin, which is as wide as camel's hair, is commended instead of silk, for it is very effective, and it has the rather stiff appearance peculiar to good silk. Camel's hair broadcloth, indeed any of the black wools may be developed in the contrasting gowns. The economy of buying material that is a dollar and a quarter yard, is nearly fifty inches wide, in preference to one which costs seventy-five cents, and which is not quite thirty inches wide seems a something that our clever American women do not thoroughly understand. I can fully sympathize with any woman who has difficulty with arithmetic, but as the economy in getting the wider stuff is so evident I must say I get provoked with women who do not avail themselves of the opportunity. The advantage gained in cutting, the fact that the material is nearly always better, and that possibly eight yards of it make a full pattern do not seem to enter the head of the woman who will insist that the narrower stuff is so much cheaper, although she will require at least twenty yards of it for her gown, while less than one-half of the wider material will suffice.

A FEW LAST WORDS.

Almost every one of us has in our wardrobe one, or possibly two black gowns. If the material is the same, and it is good, both may go to the dyer's vat, and after their inky bath may come out looking as good as new. Then the contrasting stuff can be gotten and the combination arranged. The putting of a color on black always makes it look blacker, and for that reason many a gown ripped, brushed and freshened up can really be made to look as good as new.

Coaxing a Delicate Appetite.

Every mother knows how hard it is to coax a delicate child to eat. The little one tries his best, but he picks at his food like a bird, we say, a morsel here, a bit there, forgetful that the comparison halts, because nothing alive is so ravenously hungry, and snatches at food so greedily in such frantic haste to devour it, as a young bird. The child is no, usually like this. He is, if not spoiled by over-familiarity with sweets, healthily ready for a meal in the middle of the day, but he simply cannot eat heartily at breakfast-time, and it is cruel to compel him to do so.

A little ingenious contrivance on the part of a nurse or mother will often induce a little one to eat; beguile him to do this, in fact, when he is hardly aware of the coaxing. The mother will tell a story of the captive down in the dark cave, who watched for the little trap-door to be lifted, and the kind friend outside to send in a tempting bit of food. Poor captive, who would else have starved, and pop, presto! opens the rosebud mouth, which is the trap-door, and down goes the bit of food, or the spoonful of porridge, or the drink of sweet milk, to the prisoner below, supposed to be in the cave of the stomach.

It is possibly a piece of bread and butter, which cannot resolve into anything but an offence until it is invested with the glamor of romance. A pretty story to this effect is related in the Life of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who, writing to his absent wife of the various domestic happenings, tells of one of the children who was averse to his luncheon. "I told him," says the father, "that there was wheat in his bread, and he ate it immediately."

A little art, a little skill, a little fancy, and the repulsive diet becomes attractive. I cut Milly's biscuit into fantastic shapes, flowers, birds, chessmen, when she cannot eat it just plain," said a mother, one day, "and then it is quite amusing to see how, one by one, she will manage to consume the roses, the wrens, and the black and white knights and pawns."

A school-girl, as a rule, dislikes very much to take her luncheon to school with her. She has left the breakfast table only a few minutes ago, and the luncheon hour is the length and breadth of the morning away. One dear little mother, living not too far from her daughter's school-room, pays no attention to this very natural disrelish, but takes pains to surprise the child by sending her an appetizing little luncheon at the noon hour, some delicate sandwiches, or some cake and fruit. And this is always welcomed with gratitude.

The appetite of a convalescent or of an invalid cannot be compelled. It must always be coaxed, and to this end the nurse or attendant will not neglect the little touches which make the appearance of a repast inviting or otherwise. The delicate china, the fastidiously clear glass, clean linen, and shining silver, a flower on the tray, and if possible a surprise in the viands, are worth more than the little trouble they cost in the good they accomplish. Strength is sustained by food, and good digestion waits on appetite, and appetite is coy, and must be courted, since a person recovering from illness is not a tramp or a plowman, though frequently as nearly in a starving condition as either of these at mealtime.—Harper's Bazar.

Birds' Air Cells.

Birds which fly highest and fastest have the most air cells. The air from the lungs, which is much warmer and therefore much lighter than the outside air, passes into and out of these cells at the will of the bird, some being able to fill even the quills of their feathers.—Exchange.

CAPTAIN JOHN R. HIRE, of schooner Lillian, says: "I was suffering with inflammation of the chest, brought on by exposure at sea. Took a good supply of Puttner's Emulsion, which perfectly cured me. It has given me a new set of lungs.

Dr. Chalmers, Veterinary Surgeon, M. R. C. V. S., says: "I used Dr. Manning's German Remedy for neuralgia. It cured me on first application. I have never used anything to equal it. Have made other uses of it and find it excellent.
