Ellen's Diary

We have known him, what do we now recall most of this man? His patience and perseverance it may be; his singular vision in working and planning for the years ahead; the fact that we have never yet heard his voice raised in anger...

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield, CHAPTER TWO

Now that the teachers were all back a good many people ate their meals with Miss Peek. Anyone at that long table was better company than Mrs. Washburn and usually Mr. Hulme sat down as far as possible from the tiresome old woman, leaving her to the latecomers who deserved what they got.

Mr. Hulme's mind swooned for a time. When it came to, later on, Mrs. Washburn was saying, "and so I always tell people it is simply out of the question for me. Other people can, but I never could."
