Testimonial

C. P. Fletcher, Esq.
DEAR SIR,—I do not wish to return to Montreal without expressing my gratitude to you for the very excellent Bell Piano that you placed at my disposal for my recital. I have tried many Canadian Pianos of different manufacturers and must say that, considering the size of the instrument, I have never found one to equal it for depth and brilliancy of tone. The action is quite as elastic and responsive as in American Upright Pianos of the highest grade. Again thanking you, very sincerely,
I remain,
Yours,

Housekeeping in India. A writer on the Anglo-Indian kitchen in an English culinary journal, gives some details of the service that reveal the trials of housekeepers in India. Filth in every form appears to be a necessary accompaniment of the East Indian cuisine. The kitchen sink is on the floor, with an outlet through the wall. There is no underground drainage, and the sewage is as apt to flow about the well as anywhere else. The cook in toasting bread holds it between his toes before a charcoal fire. Chinamen are more cleanly, but they frequently use the soup tureen to wash their feet in. In one particular East Indians secure greater cleanliness through the use of pure wood ashes for washing utensils instead of soap. The former have a disagreeable reminder, as in the case of the latter. In all accounts of East Indian cookery the inevitable curry plays the leading part. It is only of late years that it has been revealed that curry powder is valueless unless freshly made. The commercial sort that is exported from India possesses no merit whatever and is a libel on the connection.

Why He Sold Them. There is no curio more unique than the typical Denver newsboy, and the dullest of their number never fails to provoke my profoundest interest if not compassion. I ran across one last evening whose picturesque and quaintness charmed me. He was a typical gamin and so diminutive in stature that I had to stoop over to interrogate him, which I did in this way: "Where do you get your papers, my little man?" "Oh, I buy 'em of Johnny Green." "And who is Johnny Green?" "He's a newsboy. He buys 'em in The Times alley." "What do you pay him for them?" "Ficents." "What do you sell them for?" "Ficents." "You don't make anything at that?" "Nope." "Then what do you sell them for?" "Oh, just to get to holler."—Denver Exchange.

The Ways of India. Lord Roberts in his book tells a good story of a native Indian servant who had been told to prepare a bath at a certain hour. Meanwhile a fierce attack was delivered by the enemy, and in the thick of it the servant, who had made his way through the storm of bullets, suddenly appeared among the headquarters staff. "Sahib," said he, "your bath is ready." "An almost better story comes from the Malakand in Chitral of a subaltern who was waked one morning by a brother subaltern's servant pulling at his foot. "Sahib," whispered the servant, anticipating wrath, "sahib, what am I to do? My master told me to wake him at half past 6, and he has not gone to bed till 7."

His Downfall. Kind Old Lady—Poor man! You look as if you had seen better days. Mr. Willie Deadtired—I have, madam. Once I dwelt in granite halls. Kind Old Lady—And why this loss of such a home? Mr. Willie Deadtired—My term expired.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

AMERICANS THE BEST.

Lillian Bell Says American Men Excel All Others as Husbands.

"American men are the best husbands in the world," writes Lillian Bell in an article entitled "On the Subject of Husbands" in The Woman's Home Companion. "If these dissatisfied American wives only knew what an immense prevalence had in the American man given us the best article in the market, and that when we rebel at our lot we are simply proving that we do not deserve our good fortune, they would never discuss the subject of having any other nationality."

"Of course in every nation there is a class of men who are as noble, as high minded, as chivalrous as even the most captious American girl could wish, but I refer to the general run of men when I say that there is something about men born outside of America, a native selfishness amounting to a sort of callousness, a lack of perception regarding the fitness of womanhood, which, summed up in a few words, might be called a mental brutality, which will weigh unflinchingly for those social contact with the super-sensitive American woman. And just as surely as American women persist in disregarding this subtle yet unmistakable truth, just so surely will they lay themselves open to these soul bruises which American men, as a race, are incapable of inflicting. I say they are incapable of inflicting them, because American men, in the face of everything, in regard to women, the finest grained race of men in the world. If at first you are inclined to question the truth of this statement, consider the men who have been educated abroad. How much is left of their Americanism? To be sure, they are cultured. They understand music and art and always wear gloves, but are gloves essential to a happy home? "Now, this is all general. I beg that the wayward man, though a fool, will not imagine that these strictures are true of every man who is not an American or that all American men are perfect. I hardly think, on the whole, that I need fear that I shall be thought to consider all American men perfect, but I do wish to state clearly and frankly my admiration for American men as a race, and when an American man is a gentleman he is to my mind the most perfect gentleman that any race can boast, because his good manners spring from his heart, and there are a few of our old fashioned enough to plead that politeness should be more than the skin."

Precedence of Ambassadors.

Who actually holds the precedence of an ambassador? Doubtless knows his business and obeys some time honored rule, but the results of that rule are sometimes a little grotesque. We suppose it was quite right in the jubilee procession to place the American and Spanish representatives side by side, though their countries are almost at death grips, but in one carriage in the procession, drawn by only two horses, were seated the Belgian minister, the Netherlands minister, the special representative of the pope, and with his back to the horses, the special representative of the emperor of China. Considering that the courtesy of Europe assigns the first place to the pope, and that the emperor of China, like the queen, rules a fourth of the human race, their representatives, sent by what is almost a stretch of courtesy specially to honor the queen, seemed singularly out of place. The exceptional honor paid, too, to the British royal family grates a little on the British notion of hospitality. They are first in the land, of course, but courteous hosts usually give the pas to their guests. The matter is of trifling importance except in the Chinese case, but we really think that for the brother of the sun and moon, whom we are always persecuting for his adherence to arrogant forms, we might have relaxed the etiquette just a little. Each more honor should have been paid, too, to the heir of the Hapsburgs, who was, with the exception of the queen, unquestionably the first but one in rank of all the princes in the parent. We suppose the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, as a reigning sovereign, ranks in the technical sense before him, but certainly no one else does.—London Spectator.

The Russian Prince.

At one of the Duke of Hamilton's dinners there was a Russian prince whose name I forgot and who sat on the right hand of the duchess. At the close of the first course a servant brought round a plate on which were a dozen little square pieces of toast, with a delicate morsel, apparently of meat, upon each, which he elicited from the duchess to consist of the inside of a woodcock and to be considered a great delicacy. Unconscious that the plate was to go round, he took it from the hands of the servant, placed it before him and deliberately ate up the whole of it, saying that he found it excellent, but he ascertained that the delicate meat upon the toast was not termed in polite circles the "stomach," but was called the "trail." Whether that particular dish or any other disagreed with his digestion I know not, but it happened that the same night, a little before midnight, the duke heard the footsteps of his guest walking up and down in the passage adjoining the rooms in which they both slept. The duke lit a candle, opened his door and went up to his guest and inquired whether he was suffering any pain, and the latter replied, "Yes, I have got a very bad pain in my 'trail.'"—Cornhill Magazine.

The Purchase of a Title.

A well known continental dealer in titles and decorations issues an annual circular. He does not sell his wares directly to his clients, but claims to have influence with the various fountains of honor which he can "tap" at will. As a proof of good faith he asks no fee until the desired piece of goods is delivered. The degree of Ph. D. can be had for a mere song. Some of the minor orders of the continent can be obtained for $500. The Austrian order of the Iron Crown is just a little expensive. It will cost $15,000. But you can be a baron or a count in some of the minor German states for $5,000. One hundred dollars will secure the title of court dentist. The price for colonels is not quoted, for even in this the continental dealer feels he cannot compete with the low sale of the American market in this particular line of things.

An Estimation of Wordsworth.

"Frank Marshall told me I saw Wordsworth often when I was a child * * * and once I was sent to the garden by Mrs. Wordsworth to call him to supper * * * He had a long, horse-like face. I don't think I liked him. I said, 'Your wife wants you.' He looked down at me, and he answered, 'My boy, you should say Mrs. Wordsworth and not 'your wife.' I looked up at him, and I replied, 'She is your wife, isn't she?' Whereupon he said no more."—"Gray Days and Gold," by
