ODYSSEUS.

He Was One of the Famous Heroes of Modern Greece.

In the last years of Shelley and his friend Byron the beginning of the Greek revolution turned the minds of these two poets, and of all western Europe and North America, toward the fair land which the genius of Byron had anew revealed to the civilized world. Byron, in the early cantos of "Don Juan" (written in 1820, but not published till 1821), had foreshadowed the Grecian revolt, and Shelley, in the summer of 1821, when that revolt was in full tide of its early success, wrote his drama, "Hellas," turning on those successes, and dedicated to Prince Mavrocordato, so famous throughout the national history of Greece. In this poem he makes allusion to one of the most distinguished of the Greek chieftains, Odysseus (Ulysses, born in Ithaca, like Homer's hero, his namesake), with whom Shelley's Cornish friend, Trelawny, was soon after to be disastrously associated:

A brighter Hellas rears its mountains,
 From waves scener far;
 A new Peneus rolls its fountains
 Against the morning star;
 A new Ulysses leaves once more
 Calypso for his native shore.

He had a stern and frowning look that showed confidence and daring. His eyes and hair were chestnut, his nose thin and straight, his forehead prominent, his head large and his shoulders broad. It might be said with truth that Odysseus was the very man celebrated in the popular song quoted by Passow:

A sturdy rock his shoulders broad, his locks are chestnut brown,
 His breast is like a brazen wall—no force can break it down.

"Moreover, he was very strong handed, fleet footed and able to make long marches. They even say he outran some of the swiftest horses. Certainly he had few equals in strength, courage, sagacity and physical beauty."—F. B. Sanborn in Scribner's.

THE EDITOR'S ADVICE.

TO ALL THOSE WHO ARE SICK OR AILING.

A Young Man was Suffering with Paralysis—Follows it and is Again Rejoicing in full Possession of Health and Strength. From the Trenton, Ont., Courier.

The editor of the Courier having obtained some relief from rheumatism by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and having observed the effect on a young man to whom he had recommended their use in the interest that everyone should take in the public welfare, interviewed Mr. Wm. H. Pickering on the subject. Mr. Pickering has been known to the writer for several years. He knew him when robust and well, a model of a healthy young man. Mr. Pickering told his story as follows, and the editor can vouch for its entire truthfulness. "It would be impossible," said Mr. Pickering, "for me to speak too extravagantly of the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In the fall of 1894 I contracted a severe cold, which developed into quinsy. Following this, paralysis set in and I continued to grow worse until at last I could not stir off my chair without assistance. I lost the entire use of my limbs, and it looked as though I was doomed to spend the rest of my days a helpless wreck. Mr. Young, of the Courier, who had observed the excellent results following the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in other cases, advised me to give them a trial, and I acted on his advice. I had finished my third box when the hoped for relief began to make itself felt and from that time the progress towards a complete cure was both steady and satisfactory. I am now in possession of my full health and strength, and I feel that this satisfactory result is entirely due to the excellence of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I shall always have a warm word to say in their favor. Medical science has not produced any other medicine that can accomplish such wonderful cures as those following the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Their action on the blood and nerves is speedy and emphatic, supplying the former with health giving vitality and the latter with renewed energy and strength. They are a certain cure for paralysis, locomotor ataxia, rheumatism, sciatica, St. Vitus' dance, nervous prostration, erysipelas, heart weakness etc.

There are numerous imitations against which the public are cautioned. The genuine Pink Pills are sold only in boxes, the wrapper of which bears the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Insist on getting the genuine and be made well.

KNOW LINCOLN WELL.

The First Meeting Was in the Flatboat on Days—Served Together Afterward in the Black Hawk War—Was Lincoln a Humorist by Nature?

Uncle Phillip Clark, who died in Mattoon, Ills., on Feb. 18, 1897, was the last person to die of those intimately associated with Abraham Lincoln in the emancipator's early experience in Sangamon and Menard counties. The frosts of 85 winters had whitened the old man's locks at the time of his death, but they had not chilled his enthusiasm or weakened the interest in the man he learned to love and admire in his youth and whose memory he cherished until death.

I had many conversations with Mr. Clark about Lincoln. Shortly before Uncle Phillip's death he told me that he first met Lincoln in 1831 under circumstances which were such as to live in his memory.

"The scene of my first meeting with him is as vivid in memory as my walk down town yesterday," said the old man, whose eye twinkled with the keen sense of the grotesque aroused by some features of the incident. This is the story as he told it to me:

"My father and I were living about eight miles from Springfield and were embarking in the business of flatboating, which was a sort of craze, as you now call it, among the well to do old settlers who sought a market for their flour and pork on the lower Mississippi. We were loading on the south fork of the Sangamon when one day in the midst of our work we observed a tall, lank, lean stranger coming out of the woods and toward us.

"He had on a ragged coat, an old drooping hat and a pair of tattered jeans pants, the half of one leg of which was then off and the other extended down into a rough, coarse pair of gapping shoes. His appearance made me laugh, and I winked at father, who soon began to converse with him. I was 15 years old and the visitor was then about 22. He soon told us his mission. He did not smile. He was so earnest all the while that his very earnestness impressed me. He bore a letter to my father from Denton Offutt, an old acquaintance of ours who had a flatboat on the other fork of the river which had caught on a snag in the stream and defied the efforts of the men to remove it. The visitor was Abe Lincoln, and the letter he brought was one asking my father for help. Father told me to accompany Lincoln to Offutt's boat. He was to come on later.

"Lincoln and I walked together six miles to where the boat was stuck. In a few moments we dislodged it and sent it floating down to the fork of the river.

"I have often heard Lincoln credited with joking and merrymaking late in life, and some have called him a humorist by nature. With all due regard for the opinions of the great men who seem to know so much more of Lincoln's heart and mind than we who grew up with him, I must deny the correctness of this, for he was the saddest and most earnest man I ever knew, and had my acquaintance with him terminated and had I never heard of him after that flatboat event, I would never have forgotten the impression of sorrow he made on me then. If Abe Lincoln learned anything, he learned how to joke, for the art was not bred with him, but came to him in after years to oil the great machine of mind straining under the burdens that God chose to put upon him.

"He told me in my conversation at that first meeting that he was working for $8 a month. He talked freely, but deliberately, and had a faculty of impressing those around him. You would call it meagerism nowadays.

"Mr. Lincoln and Offutt waited for us two days at the fork of the river, and at the end of that time my father, myself and William McLease, with the boat steerer, Sam McKee, joined them. There was danger of the snags, and we all tied up at night and built a fire and enjoyed ourselves socially. Lincoln told me he thought he could better his situation, as he had no liking for the flatboat business. He thought seriously of settling at Walnut Hills, a place not far from Beardstown. But we did not agree as to the enterprise, and Lincoln abandoned this idea.

"The trip to Beardstown required seven days. We had a man of the name of Ward who did the cooking, and had a skiff to take us ashore when we wished to land at any place. During this trip I became as well acquainted with Lincoln as one young man well could with another. His conversation was such as to draw out information from his companions. He was always, even in those cheerless times, aspiring to better knowledge and better position.

"I returned to my home near Springfield after parting with my new friend at Beardstown. I did not go farther down the river at that time, and he went to New Orleans. Neighborhoods then were not a few miles across as now, but they covered immense spaces. People spoke of others living 80 or 40 miles away as neighbors, though the country was beginning to fill up.

"I saw Lincoln occasionally, but was not again associated with him until the spring of 1833, when, with a number of others, I enlisted for the Black Hawk war, and by my own choice in Mr. Lincoln's company. I was surprised and glad to see him an officer. We went together to Beardstown, where, on account of my ability as a boat steerer and my knowledge of the waters, I was transferred to another company and went to Fort Armstrong, near Rock Island. Lincoln secured me the position, and it was a great improvement on the duties of a private soldier on the march. I was given the choice of row-boats and many other nice privileges.

"Lincoln rejoined us at the fort, and the army proceeded up the river. I was with Lincoln every day now, and made the acquaintance of several other men whom I did not then think would figure in history. There were Jeff Davis, a second lieutenant in the Seventh Infantry, and Joe Johnston, captain. I got to know them both. Davis drilled my company. I met and knew Zach Taylor, who walked round over the boats every day in an old rough blouse, making him look like anything but a commander. But beneath his gruff and short words I learned to know that old Zach had a kind heart."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Any one can use Paint that is properly prepared and used in the right place. The difficulty is that most people do not know the difference between good paint and poor paint, nor the proper place to use even a good paint. All paints are not alike. One may be good for outdoor use, and not for indoor use, one may give a bright, glossy finish, another an oil finish that can be washed. It is knowing what to use, and where to use it, that makes painting a success.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS FAMILY PAINT is made for touching up the little things about the house. It gives an oil finish. It can be washed—so it is suited for shelves, cupboards, etc.

Our booklet "Paint Points," covers the ground. It tells what you need to know about good or bad paint. It tells what to use for a buggy, what for a bath tub, for iron bedstead, for a house, for a floor, for a bench. It is a practical book for the home. It is free to any address. Send for it to-day. "Why didn't you keep to your own side of the road" You Blooming Idiot!

Well, perhaps it was my fault, but never mind, I have a pot of "Quickcure" in my kit and it will cure our bruises before we get home. You never saw anything like the way it will heal a cut or a bruise of any kind, and for sprains and strains it is—well, it is just "out of sight."

HENRY IEVERS, L.D.S., Quebec, writes: "One of my children sprained her ankle, which became much swollen and discoloured. Some 'Quickcure' was spread on linen, and applied; the pain ceased at once, the swelling was gone the next day, and on the fourth day she walked to school as usual. I have also proved it to be a wonderful remedy for cuts and bruises."
