SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, July 13.

Mr. Heartz cross-examined by Mr. Thompson:

The Dawson's are relations of mine. I served my time with the old man. Recollect when the City Tannery was put up: helped to put it up—32 or perhaps 35 years ago. Old Mr Dawson had retired from business about 15 years ago. The alteration in the Tannery buildings was made in 1860 or 1858, by W. B. Dawson's making additions to them He (W. B. Dawson) succeeded his father in business. He retired from the Tannery, and went into business as a storekeeper, and dealer in grain. He failed in 1857 or 1858. Rather think he was heavily indebted, but he had large assets. He was indebted to me at that time, over or about £2000. He owed me a Bond of £1800, and other securities. In 1857 or 1858, he owed me more than that; and I took a Bill of Sale, and a Bond besides. I entered up Judgment—engaged Mr. Palmer to do it. I rather think I told Mr. Hodgson to issue an execution; but I do not think he did. There was another Judgment against him for £200. I bought it. It arose out of a returned Bill. The Bank of P. E. I. held it. They thought they would lose it; but I bought it, and paid it in full, and expenses also. In the course of his cross-examination, the witness stated the various sums in which W. B. Dawson stood indebted to him, and the manner in which, in each case, the indebtedness arose. He was then questioned about the sale of W. B. Dawson's furniture, &c., which had been seized and sold under an execution taken out by him. He said, I recollect the furniture's being sold. Do not know who bought it in. It was a bona-fide sale so far as I know. I think Henry Smith bought in the furniture. I believe he did. I got the money realized by the sale from William Dodd, the auctioneer. Do not know that the furniture was bought in with W. B. Dawson's money. Know that I got my money from William Dodd. Directed Dodd to take an Inventory of all W. B. Dawson's goods and furniture, and to sell them at public auction. I swear I knew nothing of W. B. Dawson's intention to buy in his furniture. Do not know that the furniture was sold by the room-full. Gave Dodd orders to sell it as he pleased. The first time I heard of Henry Smith's having granted W. B. Dawson a lease of the furniture bought in, was in this Court, the other day. At the time the steam-engine was put up, W. B. Dawson was in difficulties. Knew nothing about its importation till it came here. I was told it was marked R. H., and I said I knew nothing about it—publicly I think. When the man Chubbuck came here, I paid him some money for W. B. Dawson—not for the machinery, but for the putting of it up—$200 I think. I did not pay the Invoice. To the best of my knowledge I never saw it. Shew it to me, and I will tell you. The Invoice was handed to the witness; and, after he had looked at it, he said, To the best of my knowledge, I never saw it before. I never held out to the public that the machinery was mine. Old Mr. Dawson and myself signed the Bond for the Custom House. I never made the entry. The entry will speak for itself. Mr. Thompson. You swear you did not make the entry? Witness. I think I did not I did all my own business at that time. Have no recollection of my having done it. I do not know who took up the Custom House Bond and paid the duty. I had no hand in it. I had not one penny's worth of interest in the business. I wished the old man and the son to get on—that was all. Mr. T. You said the old man went out of business 15 years ago, then how could your wish about getting on apply to him. Witness. I wished them all well Never made an entry in my life of my own goods. I swear that I never, in any way made an entry of goods belonging to the Dawsons. Here the witness was shewn the entry in his name in the Entry Book of the Custom House, and he said I never saw it before, and I never made an entry of any of my own goods, therefore I never made that. I swear positively that I never made an entry myself. Mr. Thompson. Did you never put your name to an entry written by another person? Did you not put your name to an entry of the machinery? Witness. I have no recollection of my having done so. Mr. T. Did not the Custom House Officer tell you to-day that he would never have put your name to that entry unless you had authorized it? Witness. He told me he would not have put my name to it unless I had made the entry. I have not one penny's worth of interest in the suit. Mr. T. Did you know W. B. Dawson was going to run away? Witness, No: he told me, and his father told me, he was going to buy goods in Boston All that I heard about his alleged forgeries was that I heard his father say he altered some notes. Mr. T. Was not everything, till he went away, conducted in his name? Witness. It was conducted in the name of the City Tannery. I know he worked in it, and it was the City Tannery then, as it is now I suppose W. B. Dawson was the person who managed it. Mr T. In 1864, did you not see his name on the City Tannery Bills as the proprietor thereof? Witness. Now, to tell you the truth, I swear that I never looked at one of the Bills. Mr T. Did you not deal with the City Tannery, and get Bills from it? Witness. No, I never looked at them. Mr. T. Did you not do business with the City Tannery for 9 years Witness. Not so long. Mr. T. Did you not do business with it from 1858 to 1868? It was not my part of our business. Mr. T. I am instructed that the Bills sent from the Tannery were headed City Tannery, W. B. Dawson, Proprietor: was that the case Witness. I do not know. I know that W. B Dawson was employed at the Tannery, and that he worked there with other men: I know not what he had to do with it, or what he had not to do with it. Mr. T. Do you not know he was the proprietor? Witness. Well, if you wish to know who was the proprietor, I will tell you. Thomas Dawson was the proprietor: he had a lease of the Tannery. Mr. T Had not W. B. Dawson the exclusive management of the Tannery, and did not the public account him the proprietor? Witness. I know he was always there: perhaps it was between them, but I know nothing about it. Mr. T. Was it not you who got old Mr. Dawson to go to Mr. Hodgson's? Witness. No: I had no interest in it. Mr. T. Did not either Mr. E J. Hodgson, the plaintiff, or his father, ask you to get old Mr. Dawson to go to Mr. E. J. Hodgson? Witness. I swear Mr. Daniel Hodgson did not. Mr. T. Had not Mr. E. J. Hodgson asked you to get hold of old Mr Dawson to come and see the notes? Witness. I am not aware that he did. Mr. T. If you have no interest in the matter, and were not requested to take old Mr. Dawson to Mr E. J. Hodgon's, why did you do so? Witness I told you it was because we wanted to see the paper and know whether it was all good or not. Mr. T. When you and old Mr. Dawson were on the way to Mr E. J Hodgson's, did you not tell him not to be troubled about it if the notes turned out to be forgeries? Witness No. Mr. T. Have you not heard respectable men say that W. B Dawson had forged their names? and why, if you believe he forged theirs, do you think he did not forge his father's? Witness. His father's signature is a very peculiar one, and I don't think he was able to forge it. Mr. T. How could he manage to forge others? Witness. Perhaps he got some other person to do it for him. Mr. T. Did Henry Smith ever tell you that his name was forged? Witness. He did. I was bound to believe him when he told me so. If he had not told me so, I would not have thought it. It is easier to forge Henry Smith's name than his father's, because Henry Smith is a plainer and better writer than his father. It would be difficult to forge his father's. When I met old Mr. Dawson at the office of Mr. E. J. Hodgson, the plaintiff, he (old Mr. D.) spoke about William's having forged about £3000 upon him, and said he had already paid enough. Mr. T. Did he say he had paid the £3000? Witness. He said he had paid enough. Mr. T. As a Director of the Bank did you not know they were not paid? Witness. I know they were paid out of the estate. Mr. T. Did you ever know from William before he went away that he had altered notes? Witness. No. Mr. T. You were equally liable with the old man for the paper in the Bank—were you not? Witness. I was liable for about £1000; but old Mr. Dawson's name was on the paper before mine. I consider that I gave a bond or guarantee. I am not, either directly or indirectly, interested in the issue of this suit.

DANIEL HODGSON, Esq., sworn. Examined by Mr. C. Palmer:

Some time in the fall my son was in my house, and he was called out. He returned in about fifteen or twenty minutes, and asked me if I would shew a certain document, which I held, to Mr. Heartz and Mr. Dawson. I came to the office for it, and went down to my son's with it in my hand. When I went into the room, no one was there but old Mr. Dawson and a young man, whom he introduced to me as his son. In a few minutes I heard the front-door bell ring, and Mr. Heartz came in with a small money box in his hand. My son also came in at the same time. I produced the document. The two Dawsons looked at it—not at the document itself, but at the Schedule subjoined, containing some figures. To the remarks which they made about it, I paid no attention. The document was then laid upon the table. The money box was produced. It contained a number of notes. They were handed to old Mr. Dawson, one after another; and he was asked if the signatures—the endorsements upon them—were his. The impression upon my mind is that he admitted that they were all his, until he came to one made by a man of the name of Finlay, when he remarked, I do not remember endorsing this note, but it looks like my writing. Mr. Heartz said it was of no consequence whether it was his endorsement or not, as the maker of the note, Finlay, of Orwell, was a good mark. Mr. Heartz, having said so, appealed to me for confirmation of his opinion, and I said, if William Finlay is the maker of the note, it is good enough. Old Mr. Dawson, after having examined others, reverted to Finlay's note again. He said he did not remember that note; and seemed distressed about it. I said, Mr. Dawson, I am afraid you placed too much confidence in your son, and endorsed everything he placed before you. He said that was a fact: he had put too much confidence in him. I stood a while with my back to the fire, and then said, I suppose you have done with the document. They said yes; and I took it away. About Finlay's note, he said let Mr. Hodgson sue for it as soon as it is due. Mr Palmer.—Did you hear old Mr. Dawson say that the notes were forged? Witness.—No: not at all. Some days, three or four, after, I met William Brown, and he said it had turned out that a note had been forged by W. B. Dawson. I did not then believe it. The notes were passed to old Mr. Dawson, one at a time, and he was asked, "Is that your signature?" I know not why, but my son had never named the subject to me in any way.

Examined by Hon. E. Palmer:

This was an accidental occurrence. I knew nothing about it. Mr. Palmer.—Your son told you what the document was? Witness.—Yes; it was a Bill of Sale or an Assignment. The notes were given to old Mr Dawson, one after another. Mr. P.—Did he examine them scrupulously? Witness.—I can't say so; but I would have known my own signature, if I had looked at it in the same way. Can't say whom I left in my son's. Think they were getting up to come away, when I left. There was not a word said about Prowse's note, that I remember. I would not have said anything about Finlay's note, had I not been appealed to about the man's solvency. Do not remember that any proposition was made about giving a Bond or Judgment as security. It seems to me as if they wanted to know for what amount the Bill of Sale or Assignment was made. They turned it over and said so many thousands. Know nothing about the carrying on of the Tannery. I knew not who carried it on. Mr. Palmer.—Have you any interest in this suit? None whatever: not one farthing of the money is mine. Have known Mr. Dawson, the defendant, for many years. First, when he was an apprentice with Mr. Longworth. Think he had a Tannery of his own on St. Peter's Road. Then he was in mercantile business, and got embarrassed. Can't say whether he commenced the tannary business again when he got out of his commercial difficulties. Never was in the City Tannery but once; and then not on business. Went in simply out of curiosity.

SEVENTH DAY. WEDNESDAY, 15th July, 1868.

At about a quarter after 11 o'clock, A. M., His Lordship, the Chief Justice, took his seat upon the Bench; and, the Court having been opened, he informed the gentlemen of the Bar and the Jury that, owing to serious indisposition, His Honor, Justice Peters was unable to attend; and that, as there was but little, if any, probability of his being able to resume his judicial functions before Friday, he would adjourn the Court over to that day. His Lordship, in making this announcement, attributed the illness of His Honor, Justice Peters, to the insalubrity of the atmosphere of the Court House, caused by defective ventilation, and, in strong language, expressed a hope that the gentlemen, members of the Bar, who were also members of the Legislature, would exert their influence, both with the Legislature and the Government, to have that most serious and crying evil remedied as speedily as possible. The Court was then adjourned until 11 o'clock, a. m. of Friday, the 17th instant.

EIGHTH DAY. FRIDAY, 17th July, 1868.

At 11 o'clock, a. m, His Lordship, the Chief Justice, took his seat upon the Bench, and the Court having been opened, he said he was very sorry to have to inform the gentlemen of the Bar and the Jury that His Honor, Justice Peters, still continued to be very seriously indisposed, and that his medical attendant was of opinion that there was no probability of his being convalescent for a week or ten days. His Lordship then further informed the gentlemen of the Bar and the Jury, that His Honor, Justice Peters, and himself, having taken the arguments of the plaintiff's counsel for a re-opening of the Court and a continuing of the tr
