she made enough money off her rather bizarre (but you have to admit, dear reader HIGHLY AMUSING!) peek show, she could donate it to the New Library. Why when she made the donation she'd even be able to park in the Visitors Parking Lot! Maybe she'd even get an honorary degree, like the one President Baked has! Yes, she'd go down in the annals of U.P.E.I. history!

Needless to say, this enterprising young woman got right down to business. Everything worked out to perfection. The library was the perfect place for the statue, and with all that empty space it housed the

The Sad Lament of the Beauty Contest Judge:

Were you aware that Maid Marion was indeed a judge of a beauty contest? Yes folks, the contest was last April and it was another one for the annals of Stagnant Services, or is it the circular files?

It all happened in this delightful manner! Once upon a time a student was denied the right of a job thing quite nicely. So, dear reader, we reach the end of this tale...of that fateful day when a crisis, met with prudence and skill, caused Stagnant Services to interview because she did not meet the necessary qualifications. It wasn't that the qualifications were that difficult to meet, for they were that the student be a girl, be a freshman or a sophomore, be outgoing, didn't mind talking to strangers and be relatively good looking. Miss Morrison:

I'd like to take this opportunity to welcome the new students to the Campus, to wish them all success in their endeavours and also to welcome the upper-classmen back for the coming year. I'm very happy to be here and I'm looking forward to meeting as many students as I possibly can and iron out any difficulties they may be having. I also send a standing invitation to visit me here at Student Services or at Marion Hall and I'll try and do anything I can for you.

Sincerely,
Marion Morrison.
