Federal Beef Subsidy Could Ease Prairie Crisis

The Federal Government has sent three teams of veterinarians into the 300-square-mile area around Regina to eradicate the outbreak of foot and mouth cattle disease, the most dreaded scourge of stock breeders. In addition R. C. M. P. officers are preparing to shoot the first infected animals to slaughter. Agricultural officials believe Federal Government may meet the national crisis with a beef subsidy. At top, herd of cattle and goats are shown being driven into trenches in California, where epidemic of dreaded disease occurred some years ago. Above photo shows system used in California to destroy infected animals.

Increased Queries From Vacationists

Wintry weather has apparently had no effect on persons planning next summer's holidays judging from the increased number of enquiries for literature received during the month of February by the Prince Edward Island Travel Bureau. A total of 744 letters were received from Canada, the United States and other countries during the month. Of these 372 came from the various Canadian provinces, 321 from the United States and 51 from other countries. A further breakdown in the figures show that 66 of the Americans who requested information stated definitely they planned to visit the island this coming summer. Fifty-five of the Canadians who wrote the Travel Bureau said they would be spending their vacation in Prince Edward Island this year. In addition to these enquiries, an unestimated number of bookings have been direct with tourist operators in the province. Of the total number of enquiries, less than 200 would be letters from children seeking information for class projects. Enquiries for February of last year was upwards of 400—considerably under this year's figure. Literature sent out, in addition to letters of reply to various queries, during February by the Travel Bureau staff was as follows: Illustrated booklets 1004; highway maps 431; accommodation booklets 33; tour booklets 358; fishing booklets 82; Charlottetown and Summerside maps 217.

hand the losing team comprised of scholars Jasper McLoughlin and Shirley Gough, were less convincing in debating the negative side, but later displayed more polish than previously shown in rebuttal. In 1949 another debating team from Saint Dunstan's participated in the Dominion Finals and a victorious semi-final match they lost in a split decision to the University of British Columbia. Commenting on the debate, Mr. Frank McMillan commended the four participants on the honor that they had brought to themselves and to the universities which had nourished them. He also mentioned the great amount of research work required by both parties for the debate. One of the contributors to the debate, he stated, was that he felt the other team laid too much stress on the affect of the Industrial Revolution. Mr. E. Somerled Trainor in his remarks chose the rebuttal as high point in the debate, declaring in his opinion that during this part the true showmanship, diplomacy, and shrewdness of the orators were brought out. In his commentary Mr. Pius Callaghan said that the St. Thomas speakers missed the expression and inflection of speech that was present when the other side had the floor. In closing he said that both members of the victors' team were exceptionally well versed in the matter they defended, and that there was little to choose between them as both were highly deserving and worthy of praise, adding that he wished them well during their venture in Ottawa. Prior to the debate, Professor Brendan O'Brady, chairman for the evening's proceedings, welcomed the guests and the opposing team and apologized for the 1-1/2 hour delay of the program, due to the late arrival of the Borden train. The two victorious debaters, Allan MacDonald and Walter Reid, will leave for Ottawa Thursday, March 6th.

Personality Development Discussed By Dr. McVicar

In the second lecture of the series "You and Your Personality," delivered to the So-ed group of the YMCA, Dr. A. A. MacVicar, Assistant Director, Division of Mental Health, discussed "Personality Development." Though he felt it was a very large field in which there are many controversial opinions, there are enough agreed upon facts and theories to compose a picture of development from birth to maturity. He then gave a definition of "personality" which he felt could be used as a basis for the lecture: that a child is born with a "unique-ness" which we may call temperament and on this is built "character." How the temperament reacts to and absorbs from the people and things around it makes the character, and together they result in personality. Beginning with the new-born infant he showed how experiments were done and observations made to prove that the youngest infant reacts to his environment in a definite way: whether acceptable or rejecting. If the infant senses enough rejection it can die from starvation. Fifteen years ago there were many cases of marasmus—starving infants—who were dying no matter what treatment was given medically; fluids in veins, transfusions and tube feedings. Now, these infants are picked up every fifteen minutes by accepting nurses and cuddled and fed their formulae. The mothering and acceptance saves their lives. Many maternity homes recognize this and allow the new-born infants to be in the same room as the mothers immediately so the infants can be given this warmth and acceptance. Later the mother furnishes the infant with the only knowledge of the world the infant can know. The warm, accepting relationship gives the child security and feeling of belonging and safety—and especially trust. When these factors are not present the child will show "nervousness," behavior will be disturbed, eating problems, etc. A child not brought up in an atmosphere which engenders trust will never know what it means until circumstances or therapy place him among accepting adults.

When he got the refusal, Reynaud told President Vincent Auriol his 24-hour effort to end France's 17th political crisis since the war had failed. Auriol then approached Pleven and was expected to continue his talks with political leaders tonight to find a cabinet to replace Edgar Faude's administration which will "fall Friday under opposition to its lone demands for a 15-per-cent tax increase. The Socialists said they refused Reynaud's invitation because they would not consort with the right wing De Gaulists, nor accept any formula which would hurt the working classes by leaving financial burdens on their shoulders.

Island Hospitals On Approved List

The thirty-fourth annual list of hospitals approved by the American College of Surgeons, at of Dec. 31, 1951, has been issued and once again includes four institutions in Prince Edward Island. They are the Charlottetown Hospital, the Prince Edward Island Hospital, the Provincial Sanatorium and the Prince County Hospital. The total list includes 3352 institutions in the United States, Canada and a few other countries. The survey list in 1951 included 4,111 hospitals of 25 or more beds, of which 81.5 per cent are approved. Of the 3,352 total approvals, 2,991 or 72.7 per cent are fully approved and 361 or 8.7 per cent are provisionally approved. Every hospital under survey is reconsidered for approval each year. The College conducted 81 initial hospital surveys during 1951. Forty-one of those institutions were awarded full or provisional approval. The Point Rating System, by means of which hospital departments and services are separately evaluated is employed in the surveys. In releasing the approved hospital list the American College of Surgeons terminates its primary responsibility for establishing and maintaining hospital standards. Henceforth the Joint Commission on Hospital Accreditation, composed of representatives from the College, the American College of Physicians, the American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association and the Canadian Medical Association, will conduct the hospital program initiated and developed by the College. This cooperative arrangement automatically broadens the scope of the hospital standardization work already under way and opens up new fields.

During early childhood the growing child "tries his wings" according to his temperament and the previous reactions to him. He tries to show his independence and usually comes into conflict with his parents. With this show of independence there is always the fear of loss of being loved, and again the warmth and acceptance of parents (now both) give him security. Then there is a swing back and forth between father and mother, the child striving to copy one and then the other, and becoming very attached to one and then the other, in periods—absorbing something from each all the time. In this stage there is danger of over-solicitousness and suppressions of the childish exuberance which causes deep frustration. If continued as a pattern the child develops anger which he cannot release. The children with organic defects like deafness, poor vision, physical deformities, poor intelligence, small size, etc., need an especial amount of warmth and acceptance. The child evaluates himself only on what the parents think of it by their behaviour towards it, and if it is accepted and loved in spite of limitations, the child's reaction to outside environment will not harm it. During the period up to around eight years of age the greatest basic work is done for the future. Dr. MacVicar stressed this fact, quoting some cases from Child Guidance Clinic. It is felt that if a child has emotional disturbances during this period, seeing the parents and helping them understand the attitude to the child will often release the strain on the child and his symptoms will disappear. He then went on to describe the period of learning from around eight years to puberty; how the child now develops friends and contacts outside the home; how these larger experiences are absorbed and how this period is a period of consolidation of previous experiences—a breathing spell to prepare for the surge of forces and energies of puberty.
